3. CONFESSIONS SUBSEQUENTLY RETRACTED.

1. ——— Confession retracted before Sessions Judge. A confession before the Magistrate, though afterwards retracted before the Sessions Court, is evidence against the party making it under s. 366 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1861. QUEEN v. JEMA . 8 W. R. Cr. 40

2. ——— Statement to Magistrate afterwards retracted—Evidence—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 205. A detailed confession made by an accused before a Magistrate, but retracted on the examination being read over to him in conformity with s. 205 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, does not amount to a confession, although the plea for retracting the confession—viz., ill-treatment of the accused by the police—may be enquired into and found to be untrue. REG. v. GARBAD BECHAR . 9 Bom. 344

3. ——— Confession to Magistrate—Want of corroboration. Where the only evidence in a Sessions trial was a confession made to a Magistrate but subsequently retracted, and it was established that the police misconducted themselves in the search of the houses of the prisoners who confessed and of others under trial, and produced evidence which was rejected as false, it was held that the prisoners could not safely be convicted on their own statements without any corroboration. 4. ——— Statement made after conditional pardon—Evidence Act (II of 1855), s. 32. A conditional pardon was tendered to and accepted by the accused. He then, on solemn affirmation, made a statement before the committing Magistrate in which he criminated himself and two other persons. Three days afterwards he voluntarily came forward and made, on solemn affirmation, another statement, in which he retracted and contradicted what he had said in his former statement. The conditional pardon was thereupon cancelled, and the accused was put upon his trial. Held, that the first statement was admissible as evidence against the accused, under s. 32 of Act II of 1855. A jury should be asked with reference to such confessions, not whether they were corroborated by independent evidence, but whether having regard to the circumstances under which they were made and retracted and all the circumstances connected with them, it was more probable that the original confession or the statements retracting them were true. 7. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 342, 364—Withdrawal of uncorroborated evidence by the witness—Examination of the accused. A and B were charged with the murder of C, the husband of B. There was some evidence that B had said her husband was dead a few days after his disappearance; and some bones, a skull, and some cloths were found in a neighbouring burying ground which were identified as those of C's. B made a statement, recorded on June 4th by the village Munsif, to the effect that she had lured C into a garden, and that A, who was her paramour, had murdered him in her arms, which statement she repeated frequently with greater detail in answer to questions from the committing Magistrate, and subsequently before the Sessions Court. On her appeal to the High Court after she had been sentenced to death she retracted her former statements and made the usual charges of ill-treatment against the police. A made a statement to the committing Magistrate which he subsequently repudiated before the Sessions Court, to the effect that he had assisted in disposing of the corpse of C at the request of his brother-in-law, who corroborated the statement in two depositions before the Magistrate which were likewise repudiated by the deponent before the Sessions Court. Held, that the conviction of A was wrong; and further (PARKER, J., dissenting), that the conviction of B was wrong. Per KERNAN, J.,—"As the second prisoner has withdrawn all the confessional statements made by her, it is necessary according to the rulings of this Court, to examine the evidence and see if there is reliable independent evidence to corroborate to a material extent and in material particulars the statements contained in the withdrawn confessional statements. 8. ——— Confession afterwards retracted—Necessity of corroborative evidence—Practice. A retracted confession, if proved to be voluntarily made, can be acted upon along with the other evidence in the case. There is no rule of law that a retracted confession must be supported by independent reliable evidence corroborating it in material particulars. The use to be made of such a confession is a matter of prudence rather than of law. Queen-Empress v. Rangi, I. L. R. 10 Mad. 295, and Queen-Empress v. *Bharmappa, I. L. 9. ——— Confession subsequently retracted, effect of—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 164. It is unsafe for a Court to rely on and act upon a confession which has been retracted unless upon a consideration of the whole evidence in the case the Court is in a position to come to the unhesitating conclusion that the confession is true: that is to say, usually, unless the confession is corroborated by credible independent evidence. Queen-Empress v. *Rangi, I. 10. ——— Value to be attached to a confession subsequently withdrawn. It does not necessarily follow, because a confession made by an accused person is subsequently retracted and there is little or no evidence on the record to support the confession, that therefore the confession is to be rejected. The credibility of such a confession is in each case a matter to be decided by the Court according to the circumstances of each particular case, and, if the Court is of opinion that such a confession is true, the Court is bound to act, as far as the person making it is concerned, upon such belief. Queen-Empress v. *Mahabir, I. Impropriety of recording statements of witnesses with a view to fix them to those statements—Confession retracted—Evidence of witnesses retracted—Corroboration—Deposition before Committing Magistrate read under s. 288, Criminal Procedure Code. It is improper for a police officer to send a person practically under custody who is in the position of a witness, to have his statement recorded by a Magistrate under s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, with the view of fixing him to that statement at the time when judicial proceedings are subsequently taken. The voluntary character of such a statement cannot but be doubted, and when retracted in the Court of Session, the Judge should not bring the statement on to the record under s. 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code, without making proper inquiry. It is not safe to convict an accused person on his retracted confession standing by itself uncorroborated, or on the statements of witnesses brought in under s. 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code without independent corroborating testimony; nor can these two be joined together and held as mutually corroborating each other so as to justify a conviction based on them. Queen v. *Amanulla, 12 B. A mere subsequent retractation of a confession which is duly recorded and certified by a Magistrate is not enough in all cases to make it appear to have been unlawfully induced. As regards the person making it a retracted confession may, even without any corroborative evidence, form the basis of a conviction. As regards other co-accused, although corroborative evidence may be necessary, it is not necessary that such corroborative evidence should by itself be sufficient to support a conviction. Semble: That a conviction based on the unsupported evidence afforded by the confession of a co-accused would not be unlawful. Queen-Empress v. *Maiku Lal, I. 6. ——— Improper examination of accused person by Magistrate—Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 164, 364, 533—Evidence Act, ss. 65, 80—Record rejected. The Deputy Magistrate of Malabar, purporting to act under the provisions of the Mapilla Act (Madras Act XX of 1859), recorded a statement in the nature of a confession made by V, who was under arrest on suspicion of being concerned in a Mapilla outrage. This statement, which was made in Malayalam, was recorded in English in the form of a narrative and was signed by the Magistrate only. The same Magistrate shortly afterwards, purporting to act under the Code of Criminal Procedure, before any evidence was recorded against V, examined him as to this statement which was read over and translated to him. In answer to questions, V, admitted that he had made it voluntarily. This examination was recorded according to the provisions of s. 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. After other evidence was recorded, V, retracted his statement. He was committed to the Sessions, tried, and convicted mainly on his own recorded statement and examination. The Deputy Magistrate was examined as a witness, and stated that the statement recorded by him was made by V, and was correctly recorded, and was made voluntarily. Held, that the record of the statement made by V to the Deputy Magistrate was not admissible in evidence against V. Per PARKER, J.—The provisions of s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are imperative, and s. 533 will not render a confession admissible where no attempt has been made to conform to the provisions of the former section. If the confessional statement of V was recorded by the Magistrate in his executive capacity, it was not receivable in evidence under s. 80 of the Evidence Act. The action of the Magistrate in examining V as to his confessional statement before there was any legal evidence on the record against him was illegal, and therefore the record of such examination could not be used in evidence against V. 11. ——— Unsigned confession—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, ss. 122 and 346—Oral evidence to prove. The confession of an accused person, taken by a Magistrate having no jurisdiction to commit or try him, is imperfect, if not signed by the accused person or attested by his mark, and is inadmissible in evidence (ss. 122 and 346, Criminal Procedure Code). The term "Preliminary enquiry" in the final clause of s. 346 means such enquiries as are the subject of Chaps. XIV (of enquiries and trials) and XV (of enquiry into cases triable by the Court of session or the High Court); and, therefore, that clause does not apply to confessions recorded under s. 122, which refers to an enquiry not during a trial, or one held with a view to committal, but an enquiry for the purpose of forwarding confessions, when recorded, to the Magistrate by whom the case of the accused person is enquired into or tried. 4. CONFESSIONS TO MAGISTRATE—contd.

When a confession is made to a Magistrate by an accused person during an enquiry held previously to the case being taken up by the committing officer, and by an officer acting merely as a recording officer, it must be recorded in strict accordance with the provisions of ss. 122 and 346 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If the provisions of these sections have not been fully complied with by the recording officer, the Court of Session cannot take evidence that the accused person duly made the statement recorded; and in cases where evidence can be taken, a Court of Session is not at liberty to treat a deposition, sent up with the record and made by the recording officer before the committing officer, to the effect that the accused person did in fact duly make before him the statement recorded, as evidence of that fact. In such a case the recording officer must himself be called and examined by the Court of Session, except in cases in which the presence of the recording officer cannot be obtained without an amount of delay or expense which, under the circumstances of the case, the Court of Session considers unreasonable. To such a confession consequently the provisions of the last paragraph of s. 346 apply. Such a confession or statement to be admissible in evidence must strictly comply with the terms of the law. The defect in recording a confession may be remedied under s. 533, Criminal Procedure Code, by examining the Magistrate who recorded the confession. A confession freely made to a Magistrate and recorded under s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is admissible in evidence, and the fact that after the confession so recorded, the same Magistrate holds the subsequent judicial inquiry and commits the case to the Court of Session, does not make the confession inadmissible on that ground. Empress v. Anuntram Singh, I L. R. 5 Calc. 954, explained and distinguished. A Magistrate may become disqualified from dealing with a case by reason of some previous action taken by him, but the character of the evidence and its admissibility cannot be affected by his subsequent conduct; or in other words, what is admissible in evidence cannot become inadmissible through the course subsequently taken by a Magistrate. XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code. The confession was recorded by the Deputy Magistrate in English, though made in Hindi, which the Deputy Magistrate perfectly well understood and could write. It purported to have been recorded under the provisions of s. 164, and was in reply to one question which was set out. The record bore the signatures of the accused and of the Deputy Magistrate, as well as the certificate as required by the section. It occupied about five pages of foolscap. At the trial the Sessions Judge excluded the confession on the ground that not having been recorded in the language in which it was made, and there being no reason why it should not have been so recorded, the document was inadmissible in evidence. He, however, called the Deputy Magistrate as a witness, and admitted in evidence his statement as to what the accused told him. This evidence, which occupied only a few lines, was to the effect that the accused told him he had committed the murder, and on this evidence alone the accused was convicted. On appeal, held, that the provisions of s. 164 read with s. 364 are imperative as to the language in which a confession is to be recorded, and that s. 533 does not contemplate or provide for any non-compliance with the law in this respect, and that, therefore, as it was not impracticable to record the confession in Hindi, the Sessions Judge was right in refusing to admit the document in evidence. Held, further, that the Sessions Judge erred in admitting the oral evidence of the Deputy Magistrate as to what the accused told him, as, seeing that he was acting under the provisions of s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the confession was matter which was required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, and therefore under s. 9 of the Evidence Act no evidence could be given in proof of such matter except the document, where, as in this case, it was in existence and forthcoming. Held, also, that, as the defects in the record could not be cured under s. 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and no secondary evidence could be given, no proof of the confession could be given, and the accused must be acquitted. 32. _____ Confession to Presidency Magistrate—Statement of prisoner made before inquiry—Statement of prisoner made in the course of or after inquiry—Criminal Procedure Code (1882), ss. 164, 364 and 533—Examination of accused persons. The sections comprised in Chap. XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) (except s. 155), do not apply to the Police in the Presidency towns, and consequently a statement or confession made to a Presidency Magistrate does not come within s. 164, and the procedure prescribed in regard to the recording of statements or confessions by that section, and (by reference) s. 364, does not apply to statements and confessions recorded by a Presidency Magistrate before the commencement of the trial. prisoner's statement in Marathi. He also deposed that the statement was correctly recorded in English, and that each question and answer when recorded was interpreted to the accused in Marathi, and that the accused then made his mark at the end of the recorded statements. He further stated that there were at hand native subordinate officials of his Court who could have recorded the statement in Marathi, but that he himself had not sufficient knowledge of Marathi as to be able to read what was written by such a subordinate, or to satisfactorily check or test the correctness with which it represented the statement made by the accused. Held, that, assuming that it was practicable to record the statement in Marathi and that consequently it was irregular with reference to s. 364 of the Code to record it in English, the statement was nevertheless admissible in evidence under s. 533, the irregularity not having injured the accused as to his defence on the merits. Jai Narayan Rai v. *Queen-Empress, I. The Sessions Judge rejected the confession as inadmissible, as it did not bear the mark or signature of the accused, and, as there was no other reliable evidence to bring home the charge to the accused, he was acquitted. Held, reversing the order of acquittal, that though the record of the confession was admissible, parol evidence could be given of the terms of the confession, and those terms, when proved, might be admitted and used as evidence against the accused under s. 533 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). paras. of s. 364. A confession of an accused person was recorded before a Deputy Magistrate by one of his clerks, under the provisions of s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, while the case was under investigation by the police. No English memorandum of the nature referred to in s. 364 was made by the Deputy Magistrate. A further confession was recorded by the Magistrate under the provisions of s. 364, while the case was being heard before him. Both confessions were recorded in narrative form, and the questions and answers were not taken down. At the trial before the Sessions Judge, both confessions were put in evidence and no evidence was given under the provisions of s. 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code that the accused duly made the statements recorded. The accused was convicted mainly on the strength of the confessions. Held, upon the authority of the decision in Titu Maya v. The Queen, I. L. R. 8 Calc. 618 note, that as the accused was not prejudiced by the questions and answers not being recorded, it was unnecessary for the judge to take evidence under s. 533, and that the conviction based on the confessions must be upheld. accepted the English as being the meaning of that which he had stated, and signed the document in the presence of the Magistrate, who affixed the usual certificate thereto. In taking this confession the Magistrate purported to have acted under ss. 164 and 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code. At the trial, subsequently to the admission of the confession in evidence under s. 80 of the Evidence Act, the Magistrate was called as a witness and deposed to the above facts with reference to the language in which the confession was taken and the mode in which it was recorded. Held, on a reference to a Full Bench, as to whether the confession was inadmissible in evidence by reason of some of the answers having been given in Bengali, but recorded in English, that the provisions of s. 164 of the Code had no application to statements taken in the course of a police investigation made in the town of Calcutta and that consequently ss. 364 and 533 had no application. Held, nevertheless, that the documents was properly admitted upon the evidence of the Magistrate under the provisions of s. 26 of the Evidence Act. Semble: The provisions of s. 164, as read with s. 364, would not be complied with, where answers made by an accused to a Magistrate in one language are taken down in another, unless it could be shown that it was impracticable to have taken down the answers in the language in which they were given; and, further, that there would be grave doubt if such a defect could be cured by s. 533. The rule, laid down in s. 21 of the Evidence Act, must be taken subject to the special provisions relating to confessions and statements of accused persons enacted in ss. 24, 25, and 26 of the Evidence Act, and ss. 164 and 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Were it otherwise, confessions and statements of accused persons not recorded in accordance with the requirements of ss. 164 and 364 of the Code might be proved as admissions by the accused, and the wholesome provisions elaborately laid down in those two sections practically reduced to a nullity. Nor can s. 533 of the Code be construed to favour that view. Under that section, when a confession or other statement of an accused person is duly made in accordance with the provisions of law, but in the recording of it those provisions have not been fully complied with, oral evidence is admissible to prove that the confession or other statement was duly made. The defect which the section is intended to cure is not one of substance, but of form only. Queen-Empress v. Viran, I. L. R.

9 Mad. 224, and Jai Narayan Rai v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R. 17 Calc. 870, followed. The statements having been recorded by a Magistrate not being a police officer, in the course of an investigation under Ch. XIV of the Code, the provisions of s. 164 must be observed. The statements contemplated by that section should be recorded in the manner prescribed for recording evidence, and confessions must be recorded in the manner provided by s. 364. Ss. 355 to 363, which deal with the mode of recording evidence, can only relate to the statements of witnesses, while s. 364 deals with all statements made by accused persons, whether amounting to confessions or not. The reason that s. 164 provides only for the recording of that class of statements of an accused which are or purport to be confessions is that the section relates to a stage of the case, namely, the police-investigation stage, at which statements of the accused which do not amount to confessions and which are elicited by examination are not intended to be obtained. Ss. 209 and 342 of the Code are the only provisions authorising the examination of the accused by the Magistrate. Empress v. Malka, I. L. R. 2 Bom. 643, and Queen-Empress v. *Viran, I. L. They were then sent up by the police to a Deputy Magistrate for inquiry. J made three statements on the 28th of February, the 1st of March, and the 9th of March 1894, respectively, two of which were confessions, the third being a withdrawal of such confessions. U also made two statements on the 2nd and 9th of March, the first of which was a confession, and the second a withdrawal thereof. On the 20th of April U was tendered a pardon, and was thereafter treated as an approver, in which capacity she gave evidence against J. J was then committed to the Court of Session to take his trial, U being sent up as an approver. In the Sessions Court U resiled from her deposition before the committing Magistrate, and was then and there treated as an accused person and placed on her trial with the other accused, and the deposition aforesaid was put in as evidence. Both accused were convicted mainly on their confessions, J of murder, and U of abatement of murder. Held, that the conviction of U was bad, the Court of Session having had no jurisdiction to try her, as she was never committed to that Court by any competent Magistrate. Held, that the conviction of J was also bad. (i) Because U's statement to the police was not admissible in evidence. (ii) Because her statements on the 2nd and 9th of March were not under the circumstances admissible in evidence, as she was not being legally tried jointly with him for the same offence. (iii) That her deposition on the 24th of April was not admissible in evidence, because, apart from other reasons, J had no opportunity to cross-examine her. The person making it, having heard it read out to him, stated it as correct. It contains a full and true account of the statement made by him." Each statement also bore the mark (by way of signature) of the person by whom it purported to have been made. Subsequently these persons were handed over to the British authorities and were tried by the Court of Session, who rejected the confessions above referred to as inadmissible in evidence. The accused having appealed to the High Court, it was held that each of the confessions recorded in the manner above described was admissible in evidence, certainly under s. 80 of the Evidence Act, and probably under s. 74 of that Act, as against the person by whom it was made. The Village Magistrate replied that there was already a hue and cry against T, but that if T spoke the truth he would consult the Head Constable and arrange that T should be taken as a witness. T at first denied all knowledge of the dacoity, but ultimately made a confession. T was charged, with others, with having committed the dacoity and this confession was deposed to by the Village Magistrate. The Sessions Judge, in his charge to the jury, made no reference to the relevancy or otherwise of the confession under s. 24 of the Evidence Act, and he said that if the confession was true it was enough to warrant the conviction of the accused. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the accused was sentenced. On an appeal being preferred on the ground of misdirection: Held, that the Village Magistrate was a person in authority within the meaning of s. 24 of the Evidence Act, and that, as the arrangement promised by him before the confession was made was obviously intended to be one that would save the accused from prosecution if he would confess, the confession was irrelevant under that section. This statement led to the discovery of some bones of the head of an infant, a stone stained with blood, and a knife, with which stone and knife she said that she had killed her child. Before the committing Magistrate she made the same statement. In her trial before he Sessions Judge, she admitted the birth of the child; she stated that it did not cry, and that she buried it, not knowing whether it was alive or dead. She also stated that the police constable had pressed and threatened her, and told her that if she confessed the truth nothing would happen to her. She denied having killed the child with the stone and sickle, and said that she had merely pressed it on the ground and then buried it. There was no evidence to show that the child was born alives. Held, that the confession before the Magistrate

Statement to police officer also a Magistrate—Evidence Act, ss. 25, 26, and 167—Admissibility in evidence of confession—Deputy Commissioner of Police in Calcutta—Letters Patent, 1865, cl. 26—Case certified by Advocate General. The prisoner, on his arrest, made a statement in the nature of a confession which was reduced into writing by one of the inspectors in whose custody the prisoner was, and subsequently signed and acknowledged by the prisoner in the presence of the Deputy Commissioner of Police at the police office, the Deputy Commissioner receiving and attesting the statement in his capacity as Magistrate and Justice of the Peace. At the trial of the prisoner at the Criminal Sessions of the High Court, this statement was tendered in evidence against him, and admitted by the Judge, who overruled an objection on behalf of the prisoner that, under s. 25 of the Evidence Act, it was inadmissible. On a case certified by the Advocate General under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent :—Held, that the confession was under s. 25 of the Evidence Act, not admissible in evidence. Per GARTH, C.J.—S. 26 of the Evidence Act is not to be read as qualifying the plain meaning of s. 25. In construing s. 25 the term "police officer" is not to be read in a technical sense, but in its more comprehensive and popular meaning. Per GARTH, C. J. (PONTIFEX, J., doubting),—The Court which under that section is to decide upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support the conviction is, in a case coming before the Court and under s. 26 of the Letters Patent, the Court of review, not the Court below. Such decision is to be come to on being informed by the Judge's notes and, if necessary, by the Judge himself, of the evidence adduced at the trial. Per Curiam.—Apart from s. 167, the Court has power, in a case under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent, to review the whole case on the merits, and affirm or quash the conviction. Such a confession is not to be received or treated as evidence against the person making it, but simply as evidence on behalf of the other. The High Court, on a point of law as to the admissibility of rejected evidence, reserved under cl. 25 of the Letters Patent, 1865, and s. 101 of the High Court's Criminal Procedure Act (X of 1875), has power to review the whole case and determine whether the admission of the rejected evidence would have affected the result of the trial ; and a conviction should not be reserved unless the admission of the rejected evidence ought to have varied the result of the trial (Evidence Act, s. 167). quence of which he discovered a fact, than is absolutely necessary to show how the fact that was discovered is connected with the accused so as in itself to be a relevant fact against him. Thus, when a police officer deposed that an accused had told him that he had robbed K of R48, whereof he had spent R8 and had got R40, and that he had made over the R40 to him :—Held, that the statement that he robbed K of R48 was not necessarily preliminary to the surrender of the R40, and was inadmissible in evidence against him. 25. ——— Statements made by accused while in police custody, admissibility of—Evidence Act, ss. 8, 25, 26, 27—Confession—Confession leading to discovery of a fact—Statements as evidence of conduct. The accused was charged, under s. 411 of the Penal Code, with dishonestly receiving stolen property. In the course of the police investigation the accused was asked by the police where the property was. He replied that he had kept it, and would show it. He said he had buried the property in the fields. He then took the police to the spot where the property was concealed, and with his own hands disinterred the earthen pot in which the property was kept. He made a second statement when pointing out the spot to the effect that he had buried the property there. It was contended that those statements were inadmissible, having been made when the accused was in custody of the police. Held, (i) that the above statements were clearly in the nature of a confession, as they suggested the inference that the prisoner committed the crime, and even if not intended by the accused as a confession of guilt, they were an admission of a criminating circumstance, and would form a very important part of the evidence against the accused, as showing that he had not come by the property honestly, and were, therefore, properly within the rule of exclusion in regard to confessions made by a person in custody of the police. (ii) That neither of the above statements was admissible in evidence under explanation 1 of s. 8 of the Evidence Act, I of 1872, as evidence of the conduct of the accused. S. 8, so far as it admits a statement as included in the word "conduct," must be read in connection with ss. 25 and 26, and cannot admit a statement as evidence which would be shut out by those sections. (iii) That the accused's statement, that he had buried the property in the fields, was admissible in evidence under s. 27 of the Evidence Act as it set the police in motion and led to the discovery of the property. A statement is equally admissible under s. 27, whether the statement is made in such detail as to enable the police to discover the property themselves, or whether it be of such a nature as to require the assistance of the accused

5. ——— Confession of Co-prisoner—Trial for substantive offence and for abatement. The confessions of persons tried jointly for the same offence may, by s. 30, Act I of 1872, be "considered" as against other parties then on their trial with them, but such confessions, when used as evidence against others, stand in need of corroboration, and cannot be used as corroborating in any way the evidence of approvers against such other parties. S. 30, Act I of 1872, ought to be construed with great strictness, and the confession of one person is not admissible in evidence against another, although the two are jointly tried, if one is tried for the abetment of the offence for which the other is on his trial. 15. ——— Confession made by person charged jointly with another for separate offences arising out of one transaction, Admissibility of, as against the other. In order to constitute an offence under s. 373 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the intention or knowledge of likelihood as to the employment of the minor for purposes of prostitution should be with reference to employment, either immediate or at some definite, and not very remote, future period, but an offence under the section is complete as soon as a girl is purchased with the guilty intention or knowledge of likelihood that she will, while still a minor under age of 16 years, be employed for that purpose, although the point of time for such employment may be remote by reason of her physical incapacity for the purpose. H, the father of two girls, twins, about a year old, sold one of them to K, a prostitute, for R9, and within ten days of such sale also sold her the other for R14. K was shown to have previously purchased another child whom she had brought up from her infancy, and who was then living with her and leading the life of a prostitute. Both H and K made confessions as to the guilty knowledge and intention with which the sale of the two children was made. K's confession was made within two hours after her arrest, and immediately thereafter she was committed to hajat for seven days. On the seventh day, on being brought up for trial before the Deputy Magistrate, she retracted her confession and assigned an innocent reason for her purchase of the girl. H and K were tried jointly, H being charged with an offence under s. 372, viz., selling girls for the purpose of prostitution, and K with an offence under s. 373, viz., buying for she same purpose. Neither was charged with abetting the other. The two confessions were used as evidence. Held, that, having regard to the circumstances under which the confession of K was given and retracted, it was open to suspicion, and could not safely be acted upon, and that the confession made by H was not legally admissible against her, as they were not being tried jointly for the same offence. legally convicted on it. Per GARTH, C. J.—Such evidence must be dealt with by the Court in the same manner as any other evidence. The weight, however, to be attached to such evidence and the question whether taken by itself it is sufficient in point of law to justify a conviction, is a question for the Judge. CONFISCATION OF PROPERTY IN OUDH.

1. ——— Limitation—Release of Government rights—Settlement—Cause of action. House property in Lucknow, of which the Government had assumed possession as confiscated under the proclamations issued by Lord Canning and Sir James Outram in March 1858, was released under an order passed on the 6th July 1863, whereby the Government abandoned the confiscation and left former owners to their rights. This property had, previously to the confiscation, belonged to one M K. Lands in Oudh confiscated under Lord Canning's proclamation were, in October 1863, directed to be settled with the heirs of M K. In a suit brought in March 1875 by a plaintiff, who claimed a share of the house property and lands as one of the heirs of M K against a defendant who was an heir of M K, and who had obtained possession of the houses and lands under the orders passed for the release of the one and the settlement of the other, the defendant pleaded that the entire property had come into her possession in 1856 under a gift from M K, and that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation. Held, first, in respect of the house property, that if the defendant was in possession at the time when the proclamations were issued, the question of limitation must be decided as if there never had been a confiscation; and, secondly, in respect of the lands, that no question of limitation could arise, since the suit was brought within twelve years from the date of the Government order for settlement, under which alone any title to the lands could have been acquired by either of the parties. Where a re-grant is made to a former owner, the new title will depend entirely on the terms of the re-grant; and if such re-grant is made for life only, no suit can be maintained to rectify an alleged mistake, and for declaration of an absolute title according to the tenor of the sunnuds by which the property was held under the old dynasty and prior to the confiscation. 3. ——— Property standing and registered in name of one party but admitted to belong to another—Registration for fiscal purposes. In Oudh, before its annexation to the British rule, a Rajah was a talukdar of a large talukh. A younger branch of his family had a separate mehal in the possession of A wholly distinct from, and independent of, the talukh the Rajah possessed as representing the elder branch of the family. The Oudh Government for fiscal purposes included A's mehal with the Rajah's talukh, so that the Rajah as the elder branch of the family represented A's mehal at the Court at Lucknow, notwithstanding that A remained in undisturbed possession as absolute owner, paying through the Rajah for his mehal a proportion of the jumma fixed on the talukh. This relation between the Rajah and A subsisted up to the time of the annexation of Oudh by the British Government. While the Governnment was making a settlement with the land-owners, and A was about to apply for a distinct settlement of his mehal, he, and after him his widow, was induced by the Rajah not to do so, the Rajah in letters fully recognising A's absolute right to the mehal. After the suppression of the rebellion in Oudh, and the Government had recognized the talukhdari tenure with its rights, a provisional settlement of the talukh including A's mehal was made with the Rajah; but before a sanad was granted to him, Government confiscated half his estates for concealment of arms. The Rajah suppressed the fact of the trust relation of the mehal of A, and contrived that it should be included in the half part of the estate the Government had confiscated, which mehal the Government as a reward granted to Oudh loyalists. A's widow brought a suit against the Government and the grantees for the restoration of the mehal and for a settlement. The Chief Commissioner held that, as the Rajah was the registered owner of the mehal of A included in his talukh, it had been properly forfeited. Such finding was reversed, on appeal, on the ground that A was the acknowledged cestui que trust of the Rajah, and that A's widow as equitable owner was not affected as between her and the Government by the act of confiscation of half the Rajah's talukh. 4. ——— Confiscation and restoration of lands in Oudh in 1858 and of immoveables in Lucknow—Gift—Title. On a claim for a share in property consisting of (a) immoveables in Lucknow and (b) revenue-paying land in a district of Oudh, the defence was title by gift, with possession, from the former owner, a member of the family through which the plaintiff claimed. As to the immoveables in Lucknow, they having been included in the confiscation which, having followed the capture of the town in 1858, was subsequently abandoned without any intention on the part of Government to make a re-grant in favour of any person, the result in regard to the present question was the same as if no such event had occurred. The other property (b) came under the general confiscation of Oudh lands in 1858, and also was restored through subsequent settlement operations in which the final order, relating to the land in question, was to the effect that settlement should be made with the "heirs" of the previous owner. Held, that the above did not preclude the defence of exclusive title by gift; the order last mentioned, on its true construction, only designating all those who might take under and through the previous owner (deceased at the time of settlement), without excluding any claimant, save those who might claim adversely to such title. The Government did not in the settlement which followed the confiscation, make any arbitrary or wholly new re-distribution of estates, or proceed as if the existence of previous titles (although they had been brought to an end) was to go for nothing. The enquiry in most cases was as to who would have been entitled had there been no confiscation. As to both classes of property, the gift was maintained. JEHAN KADR v. AFSAR BAHU BEGUM —— —— Gujarat Talukdars' Act (Bom. Act VI of 1888, as amended by Act II of 1905), s. 31—Decree—Execution against Talukdars' estate—Consent of the Talukdari Settlement Officer—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 320, 323. In execution of a money decree against a talukdar, several villages belonging to him were attached: and the darkhast was sent to the Talukdari Settlement Officer (who combined in himself the functions of Collector and Talukdari Settlement Officer for the purpose of execution of decrees against or in respect of talukdari lands) to be dealt with under ss. 320—325 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. That Officer acting under the sections framed a scheme of management and placed the decree-holder in possession of one of the villages for a given number of years. All this was done after the death of the original judgment-debtor and after the amendment of s. 31 of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act, 1888, was made in 1905, but in ignorance of the amendment. The Talukdari Settlement Officer then took up the position that what he had done was done by him under the Civil Procedure Code, 1882; and that as he had not given his written consent to the arrangement as provided by the amended s. 31, the darkhast preferred by the decree-holder should be disposed of. Per CHANDAVARKAR, J.:—If a person holding a certain office is empowered by law in virtue of that office to give previous consent in writing to certain proceedings or acts as a condition precedent to their legality or validity, and the person as a matter of fact gives such consent, it cannot be the less a consent previously given in writing, merely because at the time of giving it he happened to be unaware of the law empowering him to consent, or, being aware of it, he thought he was consenting in virtue of another office which he held. His ignorance of the law giving him the power cannot make the consent not a consent and is no legal ground or excuse for withdrawing it after he has once given it. Where a certain act requires the concurrence of an official person, there is a presumption in favour of its due execution on the ground of the legal maxim omnia præsumuntur rite et solenniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. In such cases "everything is presumed to be rightly and duly performed until the contrary is shown." That presumption can be rebutted by proof that certain forms required by law were not complied with. Where the two offices are combined in one and the same person on grounds of public convenience or expediency, his action must be referred to the exercise of his discretionary powers under both the capacities if it can be so referred. S. 31 of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act (Bom. Act VI of 1888) requires that there must be (i) consent, (ii) it must be previous, and (iii) it must be in writing. If these conditions are fulfilled the requirements of the section are complied with. No particular form is requisite. PURSHOTTAM v. HARBHAMJI (1909) I. L. R. 33 Bom. 443

1. ——— Practice of Courts in India—Contract—Consideration, proof of. It is the established practice of the Courts in India, in cases of contract, to require satisfactory proof that consideration has been actually received according to the terms of the contract, and a contract under seal does not of itself in India import that there was a sufficient consideration for the agreement. A plaintiff, however, suing to set aside a security admittedly executed by himself, must make out a good primâ facie case before the defendants can be called on to prove consideration. VASUDEV BHAT v. VENKATESH SANBHAV . . 10 Bom. 139

22. ——— Moral Consideration—Promise to pay at majority debt during infancy—Promise to pay barred debt. The general rule of law is that a consideration merely moral is not valuable consideration such as would support a promise. But there are instances of enforceable promises which formerly were referred to the now exploded principle of previous moral obligation, and which are still held to be binding, although that principle has been rejected. Amongst those instances is a promise after full age to pay a debt contracted during infancy, and a promise in renewal of a debt barred by the law of limitation. The efficacy of such promises is now based upon the principle that where the consideration was originally beneficial to the party promising, and he be protected from liability by some provision of the statute or common law meant for his advantage, he may renounce the benefit of that law, and if he promise to pay the debt, he is bound by the law to perform that promise. D executed a razinama in favour of the plaintiff on 20th August 1868 transferring certain lands to the latter. indorsed and sent it to the plaintiff in Bombay, who received it, got it accepted, and presented it for payment to the drawee, by whom in Bombay it was dishonoured. The plaintiff who was the agent and banker of an Ajmir constituent, on its acceptance by the drawee, credited the Ajmir constituent with the amount as of the date when the hundi would become payable. In a suit against the first indorser: Held, that, as between the Ajmir constituent and the first indorser (the defendant), the giving by the Ajmir constituent to the defendant of another hundi, which was never presented in Bombay for acceptance or payment, was a consideration for the indorsement by the defendant to the Ajmir constituent of the hundi sent by the latter to the plaintiff and sued on by him. 24. ——— Contract to give Lease—Proof of consideration. In a suit for a declaration of right to, and to obtain possession of a raiyati jote by virtue of an amaldari pottah granted to plaintiff by defendant, where the terms of the pottah were substantially that the plaintiff was to have a raiyati jote at a certain jumma, and that, on there being a measurement and re-assessment, the plaintiff was to be liable to pay higher (i.e., pergunnah) rates, there being no mention of consideration or any reference to a right of occupancy: Held, that plaintiff could not urge that the written contract conveyed to him a right of permanent possession for due consideration, nor could defendant be legally called upon to prove payment of consideration. BUNGO CHANDER CHUCKERBUTTY v. NUZMOODEEN AHMED 11 W. R. 156

25. ——— Contract to pay Maintenance. Plaintiff was brought from his native place by defendant's adoptive father, D, who had no one to inherit his property, except his daughter's daughter, with a view to give her to plaintiff in marriage, and confer on him all he possessed. After marriage D's grand-daughter died; but owing to defendant's being adopted, plaintiff was deprived of all the cherished hopes of his wife's future inheritance. Accordingly the adoptive mother and defendant executed a moshairah-patra in plaintiff's favour, promising him, in consideration of the above facts, a monthly allowance for maintenance. The present suit was to recover a balance due of this allowance. Held, that, whether the English law was applied, or the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience, the deed disclosed a good and sufficient consideration for the promise to pay, and defendant was bound to pay the stipulated allowance. 26. ——— Suit for land under pottah—Question of consideration. In a suit to recover certain land alleged to have been granted under a pottah, the Judge, finding that no consideration had been given by the plaintiff, pronounced the contract a nudum pactum on which no action would lie. Held, that, as defendant had admitted the grant of the pottah, and contended that the whole of the lands had been made over to plaintiff's possession no question of consideration could arise. ROOP NARAIN SINGH v. CHATOOREE SINGH . . . . 12 W. R. 283

27. ——— Contract to grow Indigo—Extinguishment of original debt which was the consideration. Where a raiyat, in consideration of an advance of money, has stipulated to grow indigo for a certain number of years, the contract is not void as being without consideration because, during the period it had to run, the debt due from the raiyat is extinguished by the delivery of indigo leaves. The contract is one entire contract upon one entire consideration, and a contract which was at its commencement based upon a valid consideration cannot become void for want of consideration by any change whatever in the situation of the parties. LEDLIE v. GOPAL MUNDUL 17 W. R. 91

28. ——— Appointment of Agent—Remedy in case of revocation of authority—Suit for specific performance. The defendant, by an agreement in the nature of a letter of attorney, constituted the plaintiff and his descendants the hereditary agents of the defendant, gave him authority to collect the rents of his share in an inam village, and promised to pay him an annual salary out of the rents. Held, that, as between the parties and during their lifetime, the appointment was valid and binding, whether or not any valuable consideration passed; the mere acceptance of the office by the plaintiff being a sufficient consideration for the appointment. If the defendant had revoked the agency improperly, the remedy lay, under ordinary circumstances, in a suit by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract. Where, however, the plaintiff chose to sue for specific performance and demanded arrears of salary: Held, that, without a valuable consideration for the defendant's promise, the agreement passed by him to the plaintiff would be nudum pactum, and the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover, except for work and services actually rendered. Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) s. 258—Contract. The plaintiff held a decree against the defendant, and in execution of it attached the defendant's property. A compromise was then made by which the defendant executed to the plaintiff the bond sued upon, in satisfaction of the judgment debt. The compromise, however, was not certified to the Court. Held, that the bond was without consideration. The adjustment of the decree, not having been certified to the Court, was not binding on the plaintiff, and, therefore, constituted no valid consideration. PANDURANG RAMCHANDRA v. NARAYAN I. L. 31. _____ Uncertified Adjustment of Decree—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 244 (c), 258—Contract Act, IX of 1872, ss. 2, 10, 23, 28. The consideration for a mortgage consisted partly of the amount of two decrees held by the mortgagee against the mortgagor. The mortgagee having sued to enforce the mortgage, the mortgagor pleaded failure of consideration as a bar to the enforcement of the mortgage. This plea was based on the allegation that the mortgagee had not certified the adjustment of the decrees as provided by s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, and they were still in force under the terms of that section. Per DUTHOIT, J., that the failure of the mortgagee to certify the adjustment of the decrees did not constitute a failure of consideration, because he did not covenant to certify such adjustment, and it was not in fact necessary for him to do so; because he could not seek execution of the decrees on the ground that, though unsatisfied, they were still in force under s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, without becoming liable to penalties; and because, if the mortgagor considered the entering up of the adjustment of the decrees to be imperative, he had his remedy by application to the Court in the terms of s. 258. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the adjustment of a decree out of Court, if never certified to the Court, is under s. 258 ineffectual only so far as the execution of the decree is concerned; that there is nothing in the Contract Act to make such an adjustment invalid as the consideration for an agreement; that an agreement founded on such consideration may be enforced without defeating the objects of s. 258; and that consequently there was, in respect of the amount of the decrees, valid consideration for the mortgage. Gunamani Dasi v. *Pran Kishori Dasi, 5 B. The mortgagor himself had offered no evidence to rebut the inference, derivable from his own previous statements and conduct, that he had received the full consideration stated in the bond. Held, that the mortgagor was nevertheless entitled to the benefit of the finding of the Court in favour of the other defendant. Makund v. Bahori Lal, I. L. R. 3 All. 824, referred to. Held, also, following the ruling in Ganga Dayal v. Bachchu Lal, Weekly Notes (1902) 178, that a stipulation for the payment of compound interest at the same rate as was payable upon the principal is not a stipulation by way of penalty within the meaning of the Explanation to s. 74 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. 35. _____ Hypothecation Bond—Lease of even date to husband of mortgagee—Provision in both instruments that interest under bond should be paid by lessee out of rent—Liability of mortgagor. First defendant and his brother (since deceased) executed an instrument of hypothecation to A, the wife of seventh defendant, on consideration that A should pay a creditor of the executants a sum which was due by them to him. The document provided that interest should be paid to A in the following manner. She was to be paid by her husband the rent payable by her husband to the executants under a lease recited as having been granted to the husband that day. The principal sum was to be repayable within 17 years. The lease was for a term of 28 years, and it, in its turn, referred to the instrument of hypothecation, and provided that the rent payable under it should be paid by the seventh defendant to A (his wife), and that after the debt to A under the hypothecation bond had been cleared, the rent should be paid to the lessors (the executants of the hypothecation bond, namely, first defendant and his deceased brother). On a suit being brought by the transferees of A's interest in the hypothecation bond: Held, that the first defendant and the sons of the deceased brother were not liable to the claim. The simultaneous execution of the hypothecation and the lease, the facts that the term of the latter covered the whole period fixed in the hypothecation bond for repayment of the principal, the relationship between the hypothecation creditor and the lessee (which pointed to their interests being practically identical), and the specific reference in each instrument to the appropriation of the rent to the interest, showed that the transaction between the parties was of a tripartite character, intended to relieve the obligors from any responsibility in respect of interest, and to entitle the obligee to look for liquidation of interest solely to the source pointed out. CONSULAR COURT—concld.

Zanzibar to hear and determine suits of a civil nature between British subjects depends upon whether the causes of action in such suits have arisen within the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, and not upon the question whether parties to such suits are resident within those dominions. Under the treaty made in 1839 between Her Majesty the Queen and the Sultan of Muscat, British subjects are liable to be sued in the British Consular Courts at Zanzibar by Americans as being subjects of another Christian nation; and by convention with the Rao of Cutch, made with the acquiescence of the Sultan of Zanzibar, natives of Cutch, having been subjected to the British Consular Court in the same manner as if they were British subjects, may be sued by Americans and others in that Court. When the British Consul at Zanzibar has permitted persons, who have not been registered as under British protection, to bring and continue suits in his Court, that circumstance must be accepted as a sufficient indication that they have excused to his satisfaction their neglect to register under Art. 30 of the Order in Council of 9th August 1866. Quære: Whether Stat. 39 & 40 Vic., c. 46, deals with the Order in Council of the 9th August 1866, except so far as that order relates to the slave trade. 1. ——— Sending officer to Judge to ask for explanation of language used on the Bench. A barrister, offended by the use of a strong expression on the part of a Judge while sitting in Court, sent an officer to the Judge's private residence upon a pacific errand to ask for an explanation. Held, by nine Judges out of eleven, that the party sending the message and the party conveying it were guilty of contempt of Court. In the matter of PIFFARD . 1 Hyde 79

2. ——— Communication with Judge. It is contrary to the practice of all Courts of Justice, unfair to an adversary, and a contempt of Court, for a suitor, under any pretext whatever, to communicate with a Judge, except by public proceedings in open Court, respecting the merits of any case in which he is interested, and which is either pending in the Court of such Judge or likely to come before him. After she had been in prison for six months, she applied to the Judge of the Court below, under s. 341 of the Civil Procedure Code, to be discharged. This order was refused. Held, on appeal, that the proceeding under which A had been imprisoned was not in execution of a decree, but that she was imprisoned under process of contempt, and that the provisions of ss. 341 and 342 did not apply to the case. Per WHITE, J.—The jurisdiction of the High Court to imprison for contempt is a jurisdiction that it has inherited from the old Supreme Court, and was conferred upon that Court by the Charters of the Crown,

10. ——— Jurisdiction of High Court —Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 136—Committal for contempt—Power to commit for contempt—Procedure. Under the authority conferred by the Charters of the Supreme Courts and continued by their own Letters Patent, the High Courts in India possess the power of enforcing obedience to their orders by committal for contempt. As regards the High Courts in India, the remedies provided by s. 136 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) in cases of disobedience to an order of Court may be regarded as cumulative. They subject the offender to particular liabilities for his contumacy, but do not extinguish the Court's power of constraining him to obedience. An application may properly be made in Court to commit for contempt of an order made in Chambers. HASSONBHOY v. COWASJI JEHANGIR . . I. L. R. 7 Bom. 1

11. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 136 and 591—Committal for Contempt—Power to commit for Contempt. The High Courts in India possess the power of enforcing obedience to their orders by attachment for contempt. An order for attachment for contempt is not an order in exercise of the High Court's civil jurisdiction, and, therefore, does not come within the provision of s. 591 of the Civil Procedure Code. 12. ——— Publication of Libel reflecting upon a Judge in his judicial capacity—Offence not included in Penal Code—Defamation—Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882), s. 5—Power of Courts of Record under common law—Jurisdiction of High Court to punish summarily. The High Courts in the Indian Presidencies are Superior Courts of Record. The offence of contempt of Court, and the powers of the High Courts to punish it, are the same in such Courts as in the Superior Courts in England. Those powers, which formed part of the common law, were conferred upon the Supreme Courts, when they were established in the Presidency Towns. The Penal Code does not provide against a contempt of Court committed by the publication of a libel out of Court, when the Court is not sitting, and neither in Ch. XXI, "Of Defamation," nor elsewhere, provides for the punishment of a contempt of Court committed by the publication of a libel reflecting upon a Judge in his judicial capacity, or in reference to his conduct in the discharge of his public duties. Because the publisher can be punished for "defamation" under the Code, it does not follow that he cannot be punished summarily by the High Court for a contempt of Court.

He can be so punished with fine, or imprisonment, or both. The provisions of s. 5 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, relating to the procedure under which "all offences under the Indian Penal Code," and "all offences under any other law," are punished, do not include a contempt of the High Court committed by the publication of a libel out of Court, when the Court is not sitting, although such contempt may include defamation. Such a contempt is more than mere defamation, and is of a different character. The jurisdiction of the High Court to commit for contempt has not been affected by the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882. By the common law every Court of Record is the sole and exclusive judge of what amounts to a contempt of Court. SURENDRA NATH BANNERJEE v. CHIEF JUSTICE AND JUDGES OF THE HIGH COURT, CALCUTTA . I. 13. ——— Punishment by imprisonment—Practice—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 493. On 1st September 1890, in an administration suit in which G as executor of a will was defendant, a receiver was appointed and G was ordered to deliver to the receiver certain Government promissory notes of the value of R45,000 belonging to the estate, which was the subject matter of the suit. He did not obey the order, and absconded from Bombay; and, on 16th March 1891, in his absence a rule for his attachment for contempt was made absolute. It was afterwards ascertained that he had used the notes for his own purposes. A warrant was issued for his arrest, and he was apprehended; and, on 23rd April 1891, he was convicted of criminal breach of trust and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment. Previously to his trial (viz., on the 9th April 1891) he had been committed to jail for contempt of the order of September 1890, so that after his conviction he was in jail both under his sentence and under the order for contempt. On the 4th October 1892, the Court passed a money-decree in the administration suit against the defendant for R80,000 and costs. The sentence passed upon the defendant for the criminal offence expired on the 22nd October 1892. Applications for his release from imprisonment under the order for contempt were made in December 1892 and 10th April 1893, but were refused. Counsel now moved again for his release. Held, that the defendant should be released from imprisonment. The right of the plaintiff to demand the promissory notes for him was merged in the money-decree. The right to demand the notes was gone, and the order that he should deliver them up to the receiver had ceased to be operative. The commitment, in so far as it was intended to enforce obedience to the order of the 1st September 1890, could no longer be continued on that ground. It was the decree now, and not the order which constituted the measure of the obligation between the parties. That was a simple money-decree, and it was contrary to the expressly declared will of the Legislature and to all modern principle and precedent to keep a defendant under commitment for contempt to compel him to pay a money-decree. If the attachment order was regarded as a punishment for the defendant's offence in not having delivered up the notes, the punishment should be commensurate with the offence. Imprisonment under it could not be indefinite. By s. 493 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), the Legislature indicated that such imprisonment should not extend beyond six months. The defendant had, however, been in jail for more than twenty months. For the criminal offence he had suffered the punishment to which he was sentenced, and the Court would not be justified in indirectly adding to its duration. Where, therefore, the public servant was absent on the date fixed in a summons: Held, that the person summoned could not be convicted under this section, though he failed to attend, having the intention to disobey the summons. 26. _____ Land acquisition—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 174, 177—Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 9, 10—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898), s. 205—Giving false information to a public servant, whether non-furnishing of correct statements as to names and interests of persons, amounts to—Contempt of Court, whether non-attendance in Court in obedience of summons to attend Court, amounts to—Notice to persons interested in lands of intention of Government to take lands for public purposes—Joint Trial. A Deputy Collector made a complaint against the lessor and the lessee of some lands taken up under the Land Acquisition Act that they had given false information in certain written statements that they made to the Collector in response to a call from him under s. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), but did not put in either with his written complaint or at the time of his examination by the Magistrate before whom he made the complaint, the written statements upon which he desired to proceed; and the Magistrate issued processes for the attendance of the accused to answer a charge under s. 177, Indian Penal Code, and s. 10 of the Land Acquisition Act. On the day fixed for trial the lessee appeared, and appearance was made on behalf of the lessor by his mukhtear, who asked the Magistrate, under s. 205 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to dispense with the personal attendance of that accused, which the Magistrate refused to accede to, and called upon him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for contempt of Court under s. 174, Indian Penal Code. Held, that in the absence of the written statements on which the proceedings were founded, and in the absence of any reference as to the particular statement or statements on which the accusation was made, the Magistrate should not have issued processes against the accused, and that his action in the matter was without proper discretion, and that the complaint was bad and should not be allowed to proceed in its existing form. Held, also, that the lessor accused having made an appearance though not a personal appearance on service of summons, and his having moved the superior Courts against the proceedings of the Magistrate, his action should not have been regarded as an offence under s. 174 of the Penal Code, and that the Magistrate's proceedings were misconceived, and that they should cease. And that the proceedings in the civil case being still before the High Court in respect of the lessee, no prosecution should be taken before the Magistrate until at least the final orders of the High Court have been obtained. Held, further, that the offence if any committed by each of the accused was a distinct and separate offence, and should be tried separately. 27. ——— Vakil—Professional Misconduct—Munsif, jurisdiction of—Disobedience of order. A Munsif called upon a vakil to show cause on the 22nd November why a report should not be made against him to the High Court for gross professional misconduct. On the same date the vakil put in a written explanation, and the matter was ordered to be put up on the 6th December for orders. On the 6th December the vakil did not appear. Later, on the 20th December, a proceeding was drawn up for the prosecution of the vakil under s. 174, Indian Penal Code, for non-appearance on the 6th December. Held, that there was no order enjoining the vakil to appear personally before the Munsif on the 6th December, and that the proceeding under s. 174, Indian Penal Code, ought to be quashed; and it was accordingly set aside. Held, also, that when the vakil had been called upon to offer an explanation, which he did on the 22nd of November, to all intents and purposes this was a sufficient compliance with the order. Quære: Whether the Munsif had jurisdiction to take proceedings aginst the vakil in the way he did. In the matter of PROKASH CHUNDER SARKAR (1903) 7 C. The Magistrate, having found that the statement was incorrect and that the accused could have produced the documents in question, charged him with having committed an offence under s. 175 of the Penal Code, and himself tried and convicted him. Held, that neither ss. 477, 480, nor s. 485 (which sections provide for the only cases in which a Court "other than a High Court, etc.," can try persons for offences committed before itself) was applicable to the case, and the Magistrate was therefore precluded by s. 487 from trying the case. 3. PENAL CODE, s. 175—concld.

It does not appear from the statement of the case whether or not the offence was committed "in view or presence of the Court" and taken "cognizance of the same day." From the judgment it would appear that it was not, and this must form the ground for the decision; for offences under s. 175, Penal Code, are expressly mentioned in s. 480 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and if committed "in view or presence of the Court," and taken "cognizance of the same day," the Magistrate would apparently have had clear power to try the offence and convict the accused as he did.

1. CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACTS.

1. ——— Printed form of contract—Writing and printing—Sale of goods to arrive. The defendants contracted to purchase certain piece goods from the plaintiffs, who were dealers in those goods. The contract of sale was written out on one of the printed forms of the plaintiffs' firm, which forms contained in print the words "now in course of landing or in the said godowns" and "now on board the ship." As a matter of fact, well known to both parties, the goods contracted for were neither in the godowns nor on board the ship. Held, that, under the circumstances, the printed words above set out formed no part of the contract entered into between the parties. 5. ——— Duration of contract—Effect of recital in regard to control over operative words. The parties during several years had transactions consisting of the deliveries of produce by the defendants to the plaintiff's agent, under advances, upon separate contracts, specifying prices, and of consignments by the defendants through the plaintiffs. A "purchase account" and an "interest account" kept between them resulted in a "general account;" and in 1872 a large sum was due thereon to the plaintiffs, to whom, in 1873, the defendants sent letters mortgaging property with instruments of title accompanying. In the beginning of 1874 the parties entered into a written agreement, which described the balance due in respect of previous advances as the " block account," comprising also an " interest account," and the transactions proceeded. The intention was shown that the advances should be liquidated " by returns," but the only date mentioned from which an inference could be drawn as to the intended duration of the arrangement between the parties was the 30th June 1875. In this suit, brought in December 1875, it was contended that the right construction of the agreement of 1874 required that it should continue to subsist (unless rescinded either by mutual agreement or on breach of its stipulations by one party justifying its rescission by the other) until the liquidation of the balance by returns; at all events, as regards the " block account." In order to the working of an agreement for a liquidation in such a way, it would have been necessary to imply obligations, for which no express provision had been made; nothing, for instance, having been fixed as to the extent, or duration, of the business, or as to the rates at which produce was to be offered or accepted. Held, that such provisions could not now be supplied, and that the stipulations as to the " block account " were binding only during the continuance of the arrangement for the conduct of the business by the parties, such arrangement being terminable at will, after the 30th June 1875. The letters of 1873, and the documents of title deposited with them, were held to constitute a security for the general balance due from the defendants to the plaintiffs, and not only a security for advances on certain of the contracts referred to in a paragraph in the nature of a recital; for the latter was not necessarily repugnant to the wider construction, and the operative words were wide enough to apply to all the transactions between the parties. The construction of an ambiguous stipulation in a written agreement may be governed or qualified by a recital; but, if the intention is clearly to be collected from the operative words, that intention is not to be defeated or controlled because it may go beyond what is expressed in the recital. 6. ——— Extras not mentioned in contract—Allowance for extras. The plaintiff, in answer to an application to him by the defendant for an estimate of the cost of some surveying tents, replied—" We send you, as requested, the prices of tents, flags, and poles, etc.," enclosing a memorandum of prices in which there was no allusion to " flies " for the tents. It appeared that no mention had been made about the " flies " in a conversation which subsequently took place between the parties during the progress of the manufacture of the tents. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover an extra price on account of " flies." 10. ——— Delivery by Instalments—Tender—Abandonment of excess—Sale of goods. A contract made between the plaintiffs and the defendant stipulated for the delivery to the defendant of 7,500 bags of Madras Coast castor seed, which were to be shipped " per steamers," and then stated that shipment of 2,500 bags was to be made in December. On the 12th December 1,690 bags arrived by steamer Shahjehan, and notice in writing was given to the defendant, who requested that the delivery might be postponed owing to his not having godown room. On the 14th December the defendant refused to take the 1,690 bags, on the ground that he was not bound to take a portion of the 2,500 bags, but only the whole at one time. On the 16th December the defendant tendered the value of 2,500 bags, which was refused, and on the same day the plaintiffs resold the 1,690 bags. On the 17th December the plaintiffs informed the defendant that 810 bags, the balance of the 2,500 of the December shipment, were due on the 18th, and they did arrive on the 19th, but were refused by the defendant on the same ground as before, and they were accordingly re-sold by the plaintiffs. Held, that, according to the terms of the contract, there was a legal and proper tender of the December shipment by the plaintiffs, and that the defendant having committed a breach of the contract in not accepting the bags, the plaintiffs were justified in reselling them at once and suing for damages. 11. ——— Delivery order for goods deliverable monthly—Sub-contract—Tender—Repudiation of contract—Damages. The defendant entered into a contract with the Union Mills for the purchase of "90,000 gunny bags at R21-8 per 100 bags, delivery from October to March, each month 15,000 bags." Subsequently the defendant contracted to sell to the plaintiffs these 90,000 bags "at R24-2 per 100 bags, delivery from October to March 15,000 each month, buyers to pay difference cash against delivery order on Mills." In August the defendant made out in the plaintiffs' favour a delivery order directing the mills to deliver 90,000 bags on receiving payment for the same at R21-8 per 100 bags, and on the same day sent to the plaintiffs a bill showing the amount of difference payable to him by them. The plaintiffs refused the delivery order on the ground that it had not been accepted by the mills; but on a subsequent tender of the order and bill, they offered, on the 5th September, to pay the amount of difference on receiving a delivery order accepted by the mills. The defendant treated the contract as at end, and sold the bags in the market. In a suit for damages: Held, that the defendant sold not only a delivery order, but the right to obtain from the mills 90,000 bags, deliverable in lots of 15,000 per month after payment of the difference, and impliedly undertook that the mills would accept the delivery order and deliver the goods in terms thereof when presented; that the plaintiffs were entitled to get the delivery order at any reasonable time before the first monthly instalment fell due; and, further, that the defendant was not entitled to repudiate the contract after the plaintiffs' offer of the 5th September, and having done so was liable in damages. from monthly shipments if space in ships sailing for Madras were not available. The second shipment was not made within one month from the date of the first shipment; thereupon the defendant repudiated the contract. Held, (i) that the interval of time contemplated in the contract was one month more or less, regard being had to the time which it might be reasonable to allow to the plaintiffs for finding a steamer available for the required shipment; (ii) that the plaintiffs having failed to make the second shipment by a steamer of which they might have availed themselves, the defendant was justified in rescinding the contract. On the 5th November, the plaintiff gave notice to the defendants requiring delivery to be given "within seven days;" and again on the 11th, that he was prepared to take delivery on the following day. On the 12th, the defendants wrote to the plaintiff stating that they would give delivery on the 28th, 29th, and 30th November. On the 15th, the plaintiff gave notice that he considered the contract at an end. In a suit for damages for non-delivery: Held, affirming the decision of the Court below, that the words "on seven days' notice from the buyer" were intended to give the buyer the right of fixing the particular time in November at which the delivery was to commence, and that the defendants were, therefore, bound to commence delivery on the expiration of the seven days' notice. period for taking delivery and for inspection dated from the 13th May. The plaintiffs did not receive the whole of the goods until 16th of June, and therefore were not ready to perform their contract by submitting them for inspection within the specified time : the defendant did not call upon them to do so. In a suit for breach of the contract by the defendant in not accepting the goods, held, that the plaintiffs not being in a position to complete the contract, no cause of action had arisen. Held, on appeal, that the goods ought to have been ready for inspection within the ten days stipulated, and the plaintiffs, not having shown that they were ready and willing so to perform the contract, had no right of action notwithstanding that the defendant never, in fact, called on them to deliver the goods for inspection. The words "ex a certain ship" must be taken to mean that the goods are really landed, and not in course of being landed, and therefore, independently of the question of the necessity on the part of the plaintiffs to show their readiness to perform their part of the contract the defendant was not bound to take goods on board ship, in respect of which, if the contract were binding upon him, he would have been bound to take the risk of any damage or loss to the goods on board ship, or in the course of landing. 16. ——— Contract for Freight—June shipment—Naming probable date of arrival of steamer—Later arrival no breach of contract—Estoppel — Notice of readiness to load. The defendant in April 1891 contracted with the plaintiffs for freight for 375 tons seeds, wheat, etc., "by any first class steamer, etc. (subject to safe arrival), June shipment. Goods to be alongside in time to be all taken in on or before the second day after notice that steamer is ready for cargo ; otherwise difference of freight at market rate to be payable on demand as liquidated damages," etc. On the 29th May defendant wrote saying he would be glad to know the name and probable date of arrival of the steamer. On the 3rd June the plaintiffs replied declaring the S.S. County of York against the engagement, and adding, in a postscript, that the steamer would be ready to load on or about the 12th instant. The S.S. County of York arrived in Bombay on the 10th June, but from unforeseen circumstances had not a berth in the dock and was not ready to load until the 23rd instant. In the meantime, on the 18th June, the defendant repudiated the contract on the ground that, having been led by the plaintiffs to expect that the ship would be ready to load on the 12th instant, he had made telegraphic arrangements on that footing, and the ship not being ready he was compelled to ship his goods by other steamers, in order to fulfil his engagements. The plaintiffs accordingly re-let the freight on defendant's account, and brought this suit for the loss incurred in so doing. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed, for that nothing had occurred to alter the original contract, which gave them the whole of June in which to provide a steamer. The statement made by the plaintiffs on the 3rd of June (in answer to the defendant's enquiries as to the probable date of the arrival of the steamer), that the steamer would be ready to load on or about the 12th instant, was not a promise, but a mere expression of opinion. The question of estoppel did not arise. On the 22nd June the plaintiffs gave their shippers, amongst others the defendant, a notice to the following effect : "As the County of York will be in dock to-morrow ready to receive cargo, we have to request that your cargo be down not later than Wednesday, the 24th instant, etc., etc." Quære : Whether this was a "notice that the steamer was ready for cargo" as required by the contract. 17. ——— Custom or usage qualifying contract—Shipment, meaning of. On 18th April 1890, the defendant signed a contract (No. 3053) to buy from the plaintiffs 25 bales grey dhoties, "June shipment, in four lots, with an interval of four weeks." These goods were not supplied, as they could not be obtained at the price limited. On 24th September 1890, the defendant gave the plaintiffs an order at an increased limit of price in the following terms : "Please telegraph your Manchester friends to purchase on my account 25 bales grey dhoties relating to No. 3053 at an all-round advance of 1*d.* per pair on original limits for November, December, January shipments, in three monthly lots, about 8 bales to be shipped in each month." This order was accepted, and the goods were shipped as follows :—6 bales were handed to the carriers (the S. and N. W. Railway Co.) in Manchester on the 28th November 1890, and were shipped at Berkenhead on the 9th December 1890 ; 6 bales were handed to the same carriers on the 4th December 1890, and were shipped on the 13th December 1890 ; 10 bales were handed to same carriers on the 23rd December and 1 bale on the 24th December, and these 11 bales were shipped on the 6th January 1891. The defendant refused to accept the goods. He contended that the documents of 18th April and 24th September should be read together, and that the final contract was for November, December, January shipments, in three monthly lots, at intervals of four weeks. He also contended that the shipment on the 9th December 1890 was a late shipment, and that he was not, therefore, bound to accept the goods under the contract. As to this last contention, the plaintiffs alleged that by the custom of Bombay in the case of contracts made with members of the Native Piece-goods Association, the date of the carrier's weight note was to be regarded as the date of shipment, and that, under such a contract as the one in question, delivery to the Railway Company or other inland carrier was equivalent to shipment. This custom, it was alleged, originated in consequence of the above Association having agreed that all piece-goods ordered out by its members should be conveyed to Bombay by certain lines of steamers only, and by no others. It was stated that, unless some such custom existed, it would in many instances be impossible for Bombay merchants to carry out their contracts, as no steamers of the selected lines might be available. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes at the hearing found that the alleged custom existed, and was generally accepted and understood by merchants and dealers in Bombay. On reference to the High Court : Held, that the contract finally agreed on was that 25 bales relating to No. 3053 (i.e., the documents of the 18th April) should be purchased on defendant's account at an all-round advance of 1*d.* per pair on the original limits. 18. ——— Sale of Goods—Non-acceptance of goods—Contract for goods to be ordered from Europe—Performance of contract by offer of goods of same description not ordered out for purchasers, but bought by vendors in Bombay. On the 7th August the defendants commissioned the plaintiffs to order out from Europe 500 cwt. copper braziers, September shipment, assorted in the manner set out in the indent signed by the defendants, "free on board, Bombay harbour," at the rate of £53-5 per ton. On the same day the plaintiffs sent a reply to the defendants' order in their usual form partly lithographed and partly written as follows :—"We have the pleasure to inform you that we have received a telegram from our Manchester friends, and so far as regards the cyphers therein used, we learn that they advise the following purchases, which will be invoiced to you at your limit, subject to confirmation by letter as usual. Order this day hundred bundles of copper braziers, at £53-5 per ton, free on board, Bombay." As a fact, however, no telegram had been received from the plaintiffs' Manchester friends, and the plaintiffs had not learned that they had advised the purchases referred to in their reply. The acceptance of the plaintiffs' offer was really based on the plaintiffs' view of the probabilities of the copper market. The agents in England were unable to carry out the order, and it remained unexecuted. On the 26th October the plaintiffs, having negotiated with one Naga Ducha to take over from him a September shipment of copper by the S.S. Merton Hall, answering to the defendants' order, and for the purpose of fulfilling it, wrote to the defendants as follows :—"We beg to inform you of the arrival of the S.S. Merton Hall with hundred packages of goods sold to you as per agreement No. 213 and have, therefore, to request payment of the cash for those goods, according to the terms of the agreement." The plaintiffs' negotiations, however, with Naga Ducha fell through, and they were unable to supply the defendants with the goods from the Merton Hall. The defendants on the 30th October wrote through their solicitors to the plaintiffs, stating that they believed the goods never came to Bombay, and that they considered the contract at an end. The plaintiffs, however, on the 29th October had succeeded in purchasing a September shipment of goods from one Beg Mahomed, corresponding to those ordered by the defendants. They then on the 31st October wrote to the defendants, informing them that it was a mistake of their clerk to advise the arrival of the defendants' goods per Merton Hall, and handing the defendants invoice of 100 bundles arrived ex Tuban Head. The defendants discovered that the plaintiffs had not ordered out these goods, but had purchased them in Bombay, and on that ground they refused to accept them. The price of copper had then fallen. The plaintiffs sold the goods by auction, and brought this suit against the defendants, to recover the difference between the price realized by the sale and the price which by their contract the defendants had agreed to pay. It was admitted by the plaintiffs' witnesses that it was intended at the time the defendants gave their order that the goods should be ordered out from England by the plaintiffs ; and that this was the invariable course of business of the plaintiffs' firm—the present case forming the only instance to the contrary. Held, that the defendants were not bound to accept the goods offered by the plaintiffs ; and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the amount sued for. An importing firm which accepts a commission to order out goods at a fixed rate, and undertakes that they shall be invoiced to the person giving the order at that rate, does not (in the absence of proof of usage to the contrary) fulfil his contract by obtaining goods answering to the terms of the order from another firm in Bombay, and tendering them to the person giving the order. 19. ——— Contract to deliver goods—Suit for non-delivery—Agreement exempting from liability in case of loss of carrying ship—Necessity for declaring name of carrying ship to purchaser—Loss of ship, what is a—July-August shipment, what amounts to. The defendants agreed to sell to the plaintiff 500 tons of coal per steamer July-August shipment. The last clause of the agreement was as follows :—"In the event of the ship being lost, this contract to be null and void." The coal was put on board the S.S. Rubens by the defendants at Sunderland on the 30th and 31st August. On the 1st September the Rubens was sunk by collision in dock, and remained at the bottom in twenty-three feet of water for sixteen hours when she was raised and her cargo discharged. The coal was pronounced unfit for a voyage to Bombay. Extensive repairs to the ship were found necessary, and she was useless until the 6th October. The plaintiff sued for damages for non-delivery of the coal. The defendants relied on the last clause of the agreement as exempting them from liability. Held, that the defendants were not liable. The Rubens was lost for the purpose for which she was required under the contract, viz., for a voyage in fulfilment of a July-August shipment, and the defendants, having proved that the coal had been duly shipped on board the vessel so lost, were exempt under the last clause of the agreement from liability for non-delivery. It was argued that until the name of the carrying ship was declared to the plaintiff as purchaser, neither the ship nor the coal was assigned to the contract, and, therefore, the loss could not be within the contract. Held, that, if such a condition was intended, it should have been expressed. The appropriation of certain goods to the contract by the vendors (the defendants), the placing them on board the Rubens, and doing all in their power to despatch them to Bombay in fulfilment of the contract were enough to entitle them to the protection of the last clause of the agreement. 20. ——— Contract to sell from 2,500 to 3,500 tons of Coal—Breach of contract—Non-delivery of coal—Damages. On the 18th May 1893 the defendants sold to the plaintiffs "the entire cargo of coal per steam-ship ——, May shipment vid canal, amounting to 2,500 to 3,500 tons or thereabouts." The defendants intended a certain steamship called the Ethelaida, which carried a cargo of 3,395 tons of coal, to satisfy this contract. This ship, however, did not load in May, and consequently her cargo did not fulfil the condition of the contract. From the day of making the contract, the plaintiffs had been urging the defendants to declare the name of the vessel in which the coal contracted for was to be shipped. On the 14th June, the defendants by letter informed the plaintiffs that the "vessels chartered for their May shipment" had not loaded in May, and they offered to cancel the contract. On the same day, however, and about an hour after the plaintiffs had received this letter, and before they had replied to it, the defendants sent them another letter as follows:—"We have now been informed that the boat our coals have been loaded in is the Ethelaida, and we now beg to declare it." Correspondence subsequently passed between the parties. On the 15th June, the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants as follows:—"Please inform us finally what you intend. In case the Ethelaida is declared as bringing coals sold to us under contract of 18th May, please let us know the date of her sailing, landing, and the particular date of her arrival in Bombay, and also how much coal she has on board." On the following day the defendants replied: "The Ethelaida is the boat chartered for the cargo we sold you.....We do not positively know whether she commenced to load in May or June. She was expected to load about 3,300 tons." On the 28th June, the defendants wrote definitely stating that the 'Ethelaida did not load in May." The plaintiffs refused her cargo, and sent in a statement of their alleged loss calculated upon 3,300 tons, the amount stated to be the cargo of the Ethelaida in the defendants' letter of the 14th June. Held, that the damages must be calculated upon a cargo of 2,500 tons only. The Ethelaida was never incorporated into the contract. The defendants declared her against the contract; but, after they had informed the plaintiffs that she had not loaded in May, the plaintiffs refused her cargo. The contract, which the defendants failed to fulfil, was a contract to deliver the Ethelaida cargo, which they were always ready and willing to deliver. The option rested with the defendants whether they would deliver 2,500 or 3,500 tons, or any intermediate quantity, and upon no principle could the Court exercise that option for them and declare that they were liable to deliver more than a cargo of 2,500 tons. CURSETJI JEHANGIR KHAMBATTA v. CROWDER . . I. L. R. 18 Bom. 299

21. ——— Suit for non-delivery—Clause exempting from liability in case of loss of carrying ship—Loss of ship—Declaration of ship after date of loss—Appropriation of goods after goods lost. The defendants by a contract dated 10th January 1896 sold 2,500 tons of coal to the plaintiff of the February and March shipment to be delivered in Bombay. No ship was named in the contract, which contained the following clause:—"In the event of the ship being lost, this contract shall be null and void." February and March shipments ordinarily arrive in Bombay on or before the 30th April following. All of the coal contracted for was duly delivered by the defendants except 1,376 tons, which still remained to be delivered to the plaintiffs. By a letter dated 25th April 1896 addressed to the plaintiff, the defendants declared the S.S. Eastby Abbey as the ship carrying the said 1,376 tons of coal remaining due under the contract. There was no evidence of any appropriation of coal on board the Eastby Abbey to the purpose of the above contract prior to this declaration. It subsequently transpired that the Eastby Abbey had run on a reef in the Red Sea on the 16th April and so seriously damaged that being taken to Suez (where such of her cargo as had not been thrown overboard was sold) she was found unable to proceed to Bombay, and she returned to England for repairs. The plaintiff sued the defendants for non-delivery of 1,376 tons of coal. The defendants pleaded that the ship having been lost, they were exempt from liability under the above clause in the contract. Held, that the defendants were liable for the non-delivery of the coal. There having been previously to the declaration of the ship no appropriation of the coal on board to the purposes of the contract, the exemption clause did not apply. Semble: In case of a contract containing such an exemption clause as the one in question, the declaration of a ship so as thereby to appropriate goods on board to the purposes of the contract is useless if made after the ship has been lost, whether the fact of the loss is known to the declar-

22. ——— Continuing Offer—Successive contracts—Reasonable notice—Offer. The plaintiffs were the agents of two mills in Bombay. The defendants were a coal company carrying on business in Bombay by their agents, the Bombay Company, Limited. The defendants on the 19th of August 1897 signed a memorandum in the form of a letter addressed to the plaintiffs, of which the first two clauses were as follows:—"The undersigned have this day made a contract with Messrs. Homee Wadia & Co. for a period of twelve months, viz., from 1st September 1897 to 31st August 1898. Sellers to supply them with Bengal Coal Co.'s Deshurghur from time to time as required by purchasers; reasonable notice to be given of such requirements. The total quantity indented for during the year shall not exceed, without seller's consent, the maximum average of 350 tons per month." Up to the 16th July 1898, the plaintiffs had indented for 1,752 tons, of which 1,552 tons had been delivered. On that date they indented for 500 tons more. On the 18th July, the plaintiffs further indented for an additional 1,500 tons. The defendants replied offering to deliver 500 tons in August, but declining to deliver 1,500 tons. The plaintiffs on the 22nd July gave notice to the defendants that they would require delivery of the balance, viz., 2,648 tons (that is, 4,300 minus 1,552 tons already delivered), on or before the 31st August 1898. The defendants subsequently delivered 200 and 500 tons, leaving 1,948 tons undelivered. The plaintiffs claimed R6,600-13-5 as damages for non-delivery. Held, that the memorandum of the 19th August 1897 was not a contract, but simply a continuing offer, and that each successive order given by the plaintiffs was an acceptance of the offer as to the quantity ordered. The offer of the defendants and each successive order of the plaintiffs constituted a series of contracts. The failure alleged was one to comply with orders given after the defendants' offer was cancelled and withdrawn. Held, further, that plaintiffs were not entitled to obtain more than 350 tons in any one month without the defendants' consent. Held, further, that the notice given by the plaintiffs on the 22nd July 1898 to supply 2,648 tons was not a reasonable notice within the meaning of the memorandum of the 19th August 1897. 23. ——— Offer—Acceptance in different terms—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 7 and 207—Evidence of previous dealings between parties when admissible. The defendant made an offer in writing to the plaintiffs for the purchase of 200 bales of pepperill drill at 9*s.* 2*d.* A few days later the plaintiffs' salesman tendered for signature to the defendant an indent containing certain terms not contained in the original offer, and in particular containing the words "Free Bombay Harbour and interest." This the defendant refused to sign. The plaintiffs, however, sent the offer by cable to their home firm, and on receipt of a favourable reply communicated this acceptance to the defendant. This acceptance the defendant said he had returned. The plaintiffs denied that he had done so. Held, per JENKINS, C.J.—"The law on this point is thus formulated in the most authoritative mode by the Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 7: 'In order to convert a proposal into a promise, the acceptance must be absolute and unqualified.' That is to say, until there is such an acceptance, the stage of negotiations has not been passed and no legal obligation is imposed. Similarly, any departure from the terms of the offer or any qualification vitiates the acceptance it accompanies unless it is agreed to by the person from whom the offer comes. In other words an acceptance with a variation is no acceptance; it is simply a counterproposal, which must be accepted by the original promisor before a contract is made." Held, further, that because the acceptance was not shown to have been returned, no inference could be drawn that the defendant must have assented to the terms in which it failed to correspond to his offer. It is clear that a person making a proposal cannot impose on the party to whom it is addressed the obligation to refuse it under the penalty of imputed assent, or attach to his silence the legal result that he must be deemed to have accepted it. Evidence of previous dealings is admissible only for the purposes of explaining the terms used in a contract and not to impose on a party an obligation as to which the contract is silent or to read into it a liability which would otherwise not exist. It was impossible to find in dealings carried out on the basis of signed indents any clue to the intention of the parties when not only was no indent signed, but the defendant refused to sign one. 24. ——— Executory Contract involving personal considerations—Assignment of contract—Contract consisting of distinct contracts with separate parties. Seven salt manufacturers, the defendants, contracted with A to manufacture and store in the factory in the name of and for the benefit of A such quantities of salt as he might require them to manufacture each season for seven years, in consideration of A's paying them at the rate of R11-8-0 per garce of salt (four months' credit after each delivery being allowed to A), and of his paying Government taxes and dues, and executing all but petty repairs in the defendant's factory. B was a party with A to the contract, though he was not expressly mentioned therein. A assigned his share in the contract to C B as first plaintiff, and C, as second plaintiff, brought a suit against the defendants alleging that the defendants had failed to fulfil their part of the contract during the second year of its continuance (1886), and praying (i) that all the defendants be directed to deliver to the plaintiffs the salt collected during 1886; (ii) that defendants 2, 4, and 7 should be held liable for any damages plaintiffs might suffer through a fall in the price of salt. The Court of first instance, having held that the contract contained seven separate and distinct contracts, each defendant having contracted with reference to his own pans only, decreed (1) that the seven defendants should pay damages at the rate of R5-12-0 per garce for the salt collected by each during the years 1886 to 1889, leaving the quantity to be ascertained in the execution of the decree; (2) that the defendant should pay the plaintiffs' costs. On appeal, the District Judge modified the decree by fixing the rate of damages at R45-10-0 for each garce of salt. Held, on appeal, that A was not competent to assign his interest in the contract to the second plaintiff, since the contract was based on personal considerations, and that the assignment of it as an executory contract was invalid without the consent of the defendants. Farrow v. *Wilson, L. 25. _____ Sale of Goods—Special place of delivery "to be mentioned hereafter"—Assessment of damages—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 49, 94, and 231. Bought and sold notes of Purneah indigo seed provided: "The seed to be delivered at any place in Bengal in March and April 1891." It was added, "the place of delivery to be mentioned hereafter." The buyer made mention of this on the 20th March 1891 in a letter to the broker for both parties. This letter, specifying Howrah railway station as the place, was forwarded to the vendor, who replied that he would deliver at his own godowns at Sulkea. This the buyer declined. The vendor and the buyer each insisting that the place named by him was the proper one for delivery, the buyer refused to accept at the vendor's godowns or at any place other than Howrah station. The vendor remained for a certain time ready and willing to deliver at his godowns at Sulkea: and the buyer not accepting delivery at that place, the vendor declared the contract cancelled. The buyer then sued him for breach of the contract to deliver at the place mentioned by the buyer. On the question whether the vendor had discharged his liability by readiness and willingness to deliver at his own godowns at Sulkea: Held, that the choice of place given originally by the contract to the buyer, subject only to the express contract that it must be in Bengal, and to the implied one that it must be reasonable, had not been converted, by the words about "mention" thereafter, into a deferred question to be settled by a subsequent agreement. The buyer, according to the contract already subsisting, had the right to fix the place. There was a special promise in the contract as to the delivery, and to complete its terms nothing more was required than a mention by the buyer of a reasonable place within Bengal. This had been made by him. The contract therefore did not fall within s. 94 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) dealing with cases where there has been no special promise as to delivery, and fixing the place of production as the place for delivery, but rather resembled what was contemplated in s. 49. And the buyer was entitled to damages on the contract. GRENON v. LACHMI NARAIN AUGURWALA

26. _____ Contract to supply goods at fixed price—Duty imposed on material subsequently to date of contract—Liability to supply goods—Indian Tariff Act (VIII of 1894), s. 10. On 2nd November 1894 the defendant contracted to supply the plaintiff with a certain quantity of dhotars made of European or Egyptian yarn No. 80 at the rate of 225 pairs each month for a period of one year. In January 1895 an import duty of five per cent. was imposed by Government on the yarn. The defendant thereupon declined to supply the dhotars unless the plaintiff paid the duty in addition to the contract price. Held, that under s. 10 of Act VIII of 1894 the defendant could call on the plaintiff to pay the duty which he had paid on the yarn, that is, he could add so much to the contract price as would be equivalent to the duty which he himself had paid. The question was whether the dhotars supplied to the plaintiff were actually made out of yarn on which duty had been paid by the defendant. TRIKAMLAL JAMNADAS v. KALIDAS DALPATRAM

27. _____ Offer of Performance—Tender of Railway Receipts endorsed in blank—Goods not available—Goods subject to demurrage or freight—Duty of seller. P agreed to sell, and F to buy, certain goods to be delivered to F in April-May 1897. The contract of sale contained (inter alia) the following clauses: "(10) The goods to be tendered fully 48 hours before the expiration of the present term of 72 hours granted by the railway company in order to enable buyers to weigh, sample, and inspect the same; and the delivery not to be considered complete until the samples have been refracted and examined, and any dispute about quality, etc., settled. (11) If railway receipt be tendered, such to be handed to buyers 48 hours before the goods are liable to demurrage under the present term of 72 hours granted by the railway company." P, not having before the 31st May goods of his own to meet the contract, arranged with H for certain goods of H to be delivered under it, and tendered to F. On that day, certain railway receipts, which had been endorsed in blank by H in respect of the said goods, were tendered to F. F was ready to pay for the goods; but, before tendering the price, he insisted upon an endorsement of the railway receipts by H to P and by P to himself. P was unable to point out the goods to be delivered under the contract, nor could he indicate the wagon numbers. P refused to procure the endorsements required by F, and thereupon F declined to take delivery as proposed, though he tendered the price in exchange for the goods. Held, that, F not having had an opportunity of inspecting the goods as provided by the contract, the tender made as aforesaid by P was not such an offer of performance of the contract as F was bound to accept. Held, also, that F was not bound to accept a tender of railway receipts for goods subject (as some of these were) to demurrage nor for goods on which freight had not been paid (as was the case with some of these goods), nor for goods that were not available on the 31st May, as in the present case. In order to establish a valid tender of the goods, it was for P to show that, had F taken the railway receipts, the railway company would have been bound to deliver the goods upon production of the receipts; and F was under no duty to point out to P that the tender was defective. F's duty under the contract arose when a sufficient tender was made to him, and not till then. Failure to justify an alleged breach of contract upon one ground only which is found insufficient does not disentitle the defendant to rely upon other grounds which his rights under the contract entitle him to rely upon. Cowan v. Milburn, *L. 28. ——— Tender of Railway Receipts for goods subject to freight—Railway receipts for goods subject to demurrage—Defective tender—Estoppel. Under a contract of sale of goods it was provided that, if, instead of the goods, railway receipts for them be tendered, they must be handed over to the buyers 48 hours before the goods were liable to demurrage under the present term of 72 hours granted by the railway company, that "sellers must be present at the time of delivery to inspect the weighing and sampling," and in their default "buyers will weigh and sample and sellers must abide by the result." On the last day of delivery the plaintiffs tendered to the defendants certain railway receipts purporting to cover the goods under the contract and "blank endorsed" by the consignee named in the receipts, and demanded payment of the goods; they did not offer to give delivery of the goods covered by the receipts. The defendants refused to accept the railway receipts until they were endorsed by the consignee named in them to the plaintiff and by the plaintiff to the defendants. It was subsequently found that freight had not been paid on the receipts, and that demurrage was payable on some of the goods, but the defendants did not at the time raise any objection on that ground. Held, that, having regard to the terms of the contract, the defendants were not bound to accept the railway receipts, or, upon their being tendered, to pay the price of the goods as demanded. That the plaintiffs had not complied with the terms of the clause relating to delivery by railway receipts, and it was open to the defendants to rely upon that objection, and they cannot be said to have waived all questions as to freight, demurrage and the tendering of railway receipts instead of the goods themselves. That the offer made by the plaintiffs did not constitute a readiness and willingness on their part to deliver the goods. MOTICHAND v. SREEKISSEN . . . 4 C. W. N. 313

29. ——— Collateral Agreement—Contract Act, ss. 21, 65—Mistake of law—Agreement to secure repayment of loan, collateral to primary obligation. By an agreement in writing, defendants, trustees of a temple, in consideration of an advance of money which they represented was required to pay off debts incurred for the benefit of the temple, granted to plaintiff a lease of the right to manage the temple lands, and plaintiff promised that he would repay himself out of the profits to be derived from the lands, and that neither the defendants nor their family property should be made liable for the debt. In a suit by plaintiff against a tenant of the temple lands, this lease was held to be void for illegality. Defendants subsequently resumed management, and plaintiff sued them to recover the money advanced by him. It was found that the agreement was entered into by both parties under a mistake as to the validity of the lease. Held, that, assuming s. 65 of the Contract Act was not intended to vary the rule, that a mistake of law is no ground for relieving a party from his own contract, plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to recover on the ground that the agreement which provided for repayment was collateral, and had failed. An agreement that an obligation which is contracted shall be discharged in some particular mode is collateral to the primary contract which created the obligation, though the two agreements may be mixed up in one contract. 30. ——— Agreement not to alienate—Mortgage. Plaintiff sued, as managing trustee of a choultry, to set aside certain mortgages of the lands with which it was endowed, made by the second, third, and fourth defendants to the sixth and seventh defendants, and for an injunction to compel payment of kist, which had been allowed to fall into arrears, contrary to the provisions of the machalka sued upon. The defendants pleaded that the mortgages made were not in violation of the provisions of the machalka. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal, the Civil Judge considered the provisions

—"Moreover, we are only entitled to cultivate the said four villages and to maintain the said choultry with the income therefrom as above stated; and we have no right to alienate the said lands by sale, etc.—fatal to the right to mortgage advanced by the defendants one to five. Accordingly he reversed the decree appealed from. Held, by SCOTLAND, C. J., that the reasonable construction to be put upon that portion of the razinama relating to alienation was that the villages were not to be alienated so as to deprive the choultry of the receipt of the portion of the produce fixed by the razinama for its support; that the security of the cultivation of the land and the application of the fixed portion of the produce to the maintenance of the choultry was all that the parties intended to effect; that there was nothing in the record to show that the payment of that fixed portion had been rendered less certain by the transfer of the villages to the mortgagees; that, consequently, the beneficial interest of the plaintiff, as trustee under the razinama, was not impaired, and the mortgages were not made in violation of the provisions of the machalka. Per HOLLOWAY, J., that the right set up was based upon a purely capricious exercise of the plaintiff's will, in the effectuation of which he had no conceivable interest; that contractual words seeking to create a right of this sort are ineffective to create it; and that, consequently, the alienations by mortgage were wrongly declared void. 31. ——— Agreement to share Costs of Litigation to be prosecuted to its furthest limits—Failure on advice to appeal to Privy Council. Plaintiffs having sought to recover from defendants their share of the costs of certain litigation which plaintiffs had set agoing at the instance of defendant's father, who was jointly interested with plaintiffs in certain property in suit, but who wanted the means to prosecute the litigation for its recovery, and who, accordingly, executed an ikrarnamah agreeing to share the costs of the necessary litigation proportionably with plaintiffs, provided they furnished the funds for prosecuting that litigation to the furthest limits; and the said litigation having terminated adversely to the interests of both plaintiffs and defendants, without any appeal having been preferred to the Privy Council, and defendants having repudiated all responsibility for costs on the ground of default in prosecution of litigation to the furthest possible limit: Held, that, as plaintiffs had merely undertaken to furnish the means for carrying on the litigation, but had not actually undertaken the conduct of that litigation, and as it was not in evidence that defendants had wished to go up to the Privy Council, and to this end had made a demand on, but had been frustrated by, plaintiffs, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover proportionate costs in the concerted litigation, with costs in the present suit proportioned to the amount

thus obtained by them. The lower Courts in this case found that it had not been proved either that the pleaders had advised, or that defendant's father had agreed, that there should be an appeal to the Privy Council. SHUSHEE MOHUN SHAHA CHOWDHRY v. TARA PURSHAD MOJOOMDAR 25 W. R. 478

32. ——— Settlement of dispute between Hindu widow and reversioners—Ikrarnamah—Condition in restraint of lease—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 10 and 15. In an ikrarnamah executed by a Hindu widow on the one side, and her husband's cousins on the other, in settlement of disputes regarding her husband's estate, one of the conditions agreed upon was that, if either of the parties should want to execute a lease, jointly or individually, "it would be executed and delivered by mutual consultation of both the parties," and if "the document be not signed and consented to by both parties, it shall be null and void." In a suit brought on the basis of the ikrarnamah to set aside a lease granted by the widow: Held, that there is nothing in any statute law which renders such a provision inoperative; neither ss. 10 and 15 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) nor any principle underlying them is applicable to it; it is not an unreasonable provision; there was no absence of equity in the arrangement, and effect should be given to it. 33. ——— Agreement to give refusal of purchase—Contract between purchaser from Hindu widow and reversioners—Breach of contract in leasing to others. W purchased an estate from a Hindu widow. On her death the reversioners brought a suit to set aside the sale and recover possession. Upon this W entered into an ikrar or undertaking, in which he agreed, on consideration of their desisting from the suit, that he would remain in possession as long as he pleased, and, when he had occasion to sell the property, would give them the refusal. Several years after, W entered into negotiations with third parties for the sale of the concern to which the property was annexed, but not being able to come to terms with them, he broke off the negotiation, and the property was subsequently leased to others. Upon this the reversioners sued to have the property conveyed to them. Held, that W's promise not to alienate the property, coupled with the promise that he would personally retain possession, amounted to an undertaking which was violated by what had taken place. Plaintiffs were therefore entitled to the conveyance sought for upon payment of the price. RAM NATH SEN LUSHKUR v. RASH MOHUN MOOKERJEE . . 24 W. R. 214

ments, to prepare the land, sow the seeds that should be supplied, reap the crop, etc. And it was stipulated that in case the defendant should neglect to cultivate the lands, the amla of the factory might cultivate them and deduct the expense from the money payable to the defendant. Held, that it was not obligatory upon the plaintiff to enter upon the lands and cultivate them on default by the defendant. 38. _____ Demurrage—Sale of cargo by consignee—Several purchasers—Contract incorporating the charter party—Liability of one purchaser for delay of all—Contract absolute. On the 2nd June 1888, the defendant entered into two contracts with the plaintiffs, the consignees of the cargo, each for the purchase of 500 tons of coal per S.S. Dunedin then in harbour. The contracts provided (inter alia) "delivery to be taken at a rate of not less than 200 tons per day. All conditions in the charter party to be binding on the purchaser." The charter party stated, "cargo to be discharged, weather permitting, at the average rate of not less than 300 tons a working day, or to pay demurrage at the rate of £30 per working day, or pro rata." Previously to the 2nd of June, the rest of the cargo had been sold by the plaintiffs to three other purchasers, and the lay days had already partially expired; but as regards neither of these facts did the defendants ask nor were they given information. The Dunedin discharged at only three of her four hatches, and so discharging was able to give delivery of something more than 300, but less than 400 tons a day. Delivery was given to whichever of the four purchasers was the first to come alongside. At the expiration of the lay days (being the days required to discharge the whole cargo at the average rate of 300 tons a day) the cargo had been completely discharged with the exception of 264 tons, which remained to be delivered to the defendant. The cargo to be discharged subsequently to 2nd of June would have been discharged within the lay days, but for the want of lighters on the part of the purchasers of the cargo generally. It occasionally happened, however, that a lighter was kept idle waiting for its turn at one of the three hatches. The plaintiffs paid one day's demurrage in respect of the delay in discharging the 264 tons, and now brought an action to recover the same from the defendant. Held, that the defendant was liable. The contract of the defendant (by incorporation of the charter party) to take delivery within the lay days, or to pay demurrage, being absolute, he could only excuse non-performance of his contract by showing it was due either to default of the captain of the ship, or of the plaintiffs themselves, neither of which had been shown. The plaintiffs were not to blame for any difficulties occurring by reason of there being other purchasers. That was the well-known nature of the trade, and it was for the defendant, if he desired protection in this respect, to provide for it in his contract. Neither were the plaintiffs bound to be able to deliver to the defendant at the rate of 400 tons a day under his two contracts. The stipulation in each of the two contracts, that delivery should be taken at a rate of not less than 200 tons per diem, was not one on which the defendant could insist, but was an independent stipulation in favour of the cargo. branch of a French firm trading in Paris under the same name, of which firm also the defendants were members. The Paris firm were agents for certain manufacturers of zinc. The plaintiff, a Bombay merchant, ordered out 48 casks of zinc sheets through the defendants' firm in Bombay by an indent in the following form :—" I hereby request you to instruct your agents to purchase for me (if possible) the under-mentioned goods on my account and risk upon the terms stated below." Such terms, inter aliâ, limited the price of the goods and the time within which the shipments were to be made. Later, the plaintiff consented to increase his limit of price. The defendants, having communicated with their Paris firm, wrote to the plaintiff as follows :—" We have the pleasure to inform you that our home firm has reported by wire concerning your esteemed order as follows :—' Placed at your increased limit'." Subsequently the plaintiff was informed by the defendants that, the manufacturers being full with orders, the zinc sheets would not be ready for shipment as soon as had been expected ; and he was asked whether he agreed to give an extension of time, or desired to cancel the indent. Simultaneously the plaintiff wrote that the contract time had been exceeded, and that he would buy similar goods in Bombay on the defendants' account. This the plaintiff did, and brought this action to recover the difference in price as damages on account of the defendants having failed to perform their contract for the delivery of 48 casks of zinc sheets. Held, that neither the defendants nor their Paris firm had entered into any contract of sale on which they were liable to the plaintiff. They had only constituted themselves his agents to ' place ' his order, i.e., to effect a contract of purchase on his account with the manufacturers of zinc—and consequently the action as brought would not lie. Ireland v. *Livingston, L. 41. ——— Agreement for permission to quarry—License, Non-renewal of—Implied condition. By an agreement (in renewal of similar agreements for the two previous years), dated the 3rd September 1888, the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff ' rent ' for a piece of hilly ground at the rate of R329 per month for one year, during which time the defendant was to be allowed to blast stones and carry on the work of quarrying to the extent of seven crow-bars ; such quarrying to be done at such places as the plaintiff had pointed out, or should choose to point out, from time to time. The rent to be paid was arrived at on a calculation of R47 per crow-bar ; and was to be payable whether defendant employed the seven crow-bars or less. The defendant, by the sixth clause of the agreement, further undertook as follows :—" As regards the police arrangement and other expenses at the time of blasting stones, and obtaining an order or license, etc., and as to any other kind of expenses, risk, and responsibility, all these are upon me. I will duly pay you at the rate of R329 per month clear until the fixed time." The defendant was a stone contractor, and had been employed in this work of quarrying all his life, and for the previous two years on this very spot, and was well aware that blasting could not be carried on without a license from the authorities, which was revocable at any time, and required renewal annually. At the time of the agreement the defendant was in possession of a license, which expired on the 31st December 1888. After that date the authorities refused to renew the license on the ground that the quarry, where operations were being carried on, was surrounded by houses on all sides, and the defendant thereupon refused to continue the payment of the monthly rent of R329. The plaintiff accordingly brought this suit in the Small Cause Court for three months' rent at the above rate. Held, looking at the nature of the contract, that it must be taken to have been the intention of the parties to it that the monthly sum of R329 should only be payable so long as quarrying was permitted by the authorities, and that there was no unconditional contract to pay R329 in all events in cl. 6 of the agreement or elsewhere. Taylor v. *Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826 : 32 L. which will be reaped in Bhadur." The defendant also agreed not to sow on the land measured any crop that might "cause obstacle to the cultivation of indigo," and, if he did so, "the amlah of the concern" should "be at liberty to destroy such crop," and he should not "oppose the destruction thereof, nor sue in the Courts, Civil or Criminal, for destruction of the same." As regards a breach of any condition, it was provided: "If I or my heirs depart from the conditions of this indigo engagement directly or indirectly or in any way neglect to cultivate or do not cultivate indigo, I or they shall pay to the abovenamed M D and H D damages for the same from my or their person and property and shall raise no plea or objection." In 1886, M D and H D assigned the entire benefit of this agreement to the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff against the defendant for damages on account of his alleged failure to cultivate indigo for the plaintiff's concern in accordance with the terms of the agreement of the 13th December 1882: Held, that the agreement must be construed as one which had been entered into by the defendant with reference to the personal position, circumstances, and qualifications of M D and H D and their amlah; and that therefore it was not assignable so as to give the assignee a right to sue upon it in his own name as for a breach of contract. 43. ——— Agreement to pay an annual sum in consideration for abolishing a bazar, suit upon—Subsequent sale of the land on which the bazar stood—Right to annual sum payable under the agreement. Plaintiff and defendants entered into an agreement by virtue of which they settled their disputes, and amongst other matters it was agreed that the plaintiff should abolish her bazar at a certain place within her zamindari, which she had established in opposition to a bazar belonging to the defendants; and it was further agreed that the defendant should pay her annually R25 in lieu of her income from that bazar. Plaintiff also undertook that, so long as this annual payment was continued, she would not establish any new bazar within two miles of the bazar of the defendants. Subsequently the plaintiff sold the site of her formal bazar together with some other land. Held, that, if the payment was to be made in consideration of her abolishing the bazar, she was not entitled to it after she had parted with the land upon which the bazar stood. That if the payment was in consideration of the plaintiff undertaking not to establish a new bazar within two miles of the defendant's bazar, she had disentitled herself to a continuance of the payment from the time when she made it impossible for herself to secure the fulfilment of the condition by parting with the land. 44. ——— Consideration— Compromise of a bonâ fide claim—Good consideration—Agreement to lend money on mortgage—Delay in completion of agreement—Subsequent agreement to pay interest from a certain date—Consideration for such agreement—Right to rescind—Time of essence of contract—Suit by lender against borrower. On 31st August 1891, the plaintiff agreed to lend the defendant R30,000 on a mortgage. By the agreement the mortgagor (defendant) was to clear the title, and the time fixed for completion of the agreement was eight days from its date. The mortgage was not completed within the stipulated time, in consequence of the non-production of the title-deeds by prior mortgagees, who were to be paid off out of the money to be advanced by the plaintiff. On the 9th September 1891, the plaintiff's solicitors wrote to the defendant reminding him that the time for completion had expired, and stating that the plaintiff would require interest to be paid on the money which he had with him lying idle on the defendant's account. On the 24th September 1891, the plaintiff formally tendered the R30,000 to the defendant, but as no mortgage-deed was then ready for execution, the money was not then paid. The plaintiff was always ready and willing to advance the money, but in consequence of the defendant's delay he insisted on interest being paid from the 24th September 1891. The title-deeds were ultimately produced at the end of November or the beginning of December, and on 7th December 1891, the draft mortgage was sent to the defendant for approval. It contained a clause stipulating for payment of interest from 24th September 1891. On the 9th December 1891, the plaintiff had an interview with the defendant. The two points then discussed were (i) what time after due date should be allowed to the defendant (mortgagor) for payment of interest; (ii) whether interest on the principal sum should run from the 24th September 1891. On the first point the plaintiff gave way, allowing defendant fifteen days, instead of eight, as originally provided. As to the second point, he declined to advance the money unless interest was paid from the 24th September 1891. The defendant ultimately agreed to this. The mortgage-deed was duly engrossed with a stipulation for payment of interest from the 24th September 1891, and the 26th January 1892 was fixed as the day for execution. On that day, however, one of the defendant's daughters who had to execute the deed was absent, and the plaintiff refused to advance the money until her signature was obtained. Subsequently the defendant refused to sign the deed on the ground that it contained the clause for payment of interest from 24th September 1891. He contended that he was not liable to pay interest from that date. The plaintiff brought this suit claiming R1,865-12-0 as damages for the defendant's breach of agreement. The lower Court held that, although the original agreement of 31st August 1891 mentioned no date from which interest should run, the defendant on the 9th December 1891 had agreed to pay it from 24th September 1891 and had made no objection on the point until February 1892. The defendant contended that, if such an agreement was made on the 9th December 1891, it was without consideration, but the Court held that the plaintiff was at that date at liberty to rescind the agreement altogether, and that he had consented not to rescind in consideration of being paid interest from the 24th December 1891. The lower Court accordingly passed a decree for the plaintiff. Semble : That time was not of the essence of the contract, but held that, in any case, under the circumstances here was consideration for the agreement made by the defendant to pay interest from the 24th September. The plaintiff clearly regarded himself as entitled to rescind, and at the defendant's request agreed to forbear to do so if the defendant would consent to pay interest from 24th September 1891. The claim of the right to rescind was undoubtedly a real one and made in good faith, and the forbearance to enforce it might well be an inducement to the defendant to agree to the plaintiff's terms, and the principle laid down in Miles v. *New Zealand Alford Estate Co., L. Where a contracting party, who cannot read, has a written contract falsely read over to him and the contract written differs from that pretended to be read, the signature on the document is of no force, because he never intended to sign and therefore in contemplation of law did not sign the document on which the signature is. It was found, however, that the transaction, though purporting to be an ordinary contract, was in reality of the nature of speculations on the rise and fall of the cotton market, and dealt with goods which had no real existence in the market ; also that in such transactions it was customary for the prices to be settled by a skilled committee of merchants engaged in similar transactions. In the present case, the committee settled a higher rate than that actually prevalent in the market. Held, that in the absence of proof of fraud either in the inception or in the proceedings of the committee the appellant was bound by its decision. Mere error would not be sufficient to upset the decision of an expert tribunal voluntarily set up for the decision of matters of skill. PESTONJI JEHANGIRJI v. JAISINGDAS HANSRAJ (1904) . 8 C. W. K,* in that suit, had set up the invalidity of B's adoption. The terms of the compromise were contained in four documents, one of which was an agreement by B promising to settle certain mehals in permanent ijara on K's wife and her heirs. Another of these documents was an ekrar executed by K, by which K purported to acknowledge the validity of B's adoption and to renounce his claims to the estate. A third was the solehnama filed by K by which K purported to surrender one of the leases granted by H on B ratifying another of those leases. In a suit brought by S's heirs for specific performance of the agreement in favour of S : Held, that K, having in subsequent proceedings impeached and contested the validity of the adoption, contrary to his ekrar, the consideration had failed and the agreement was unenforceable. That the plaintiffs in claiming as heirs of S were not in a better position than if they had sued as heirs of K, as the circumstances of the case showed that S was merely a benamidar for K, and could not in any case claim a better right or title than K. There is not necessarily any inconsistency in a party, who has unsuccessfully tried to rescind an agree-

Cl. 13 of the contract provided as follows:—"Terms of payment cash on delivery of mate's receipts, dock receipts or as provided in cls. 8, 9, and 11. Under A's instructions the goods were placed alongside the vessel by the seller and subsequently shipped. Mate's receipts were made over to A for examination together with B's bill for payment. A subsequently without paying for the goods obtained bills of lading in exchange for mate's receipts, and thereafter pledged them with C without notice of B's claim, and C thereupon gave credit to A for the full amount of the bills of exchange drawn against the goods represented by the bill of lading. Held, that the goods under the contract were unascertained at the date of contract, and therefore the sale was not complete, unless there was an appropriation by B as seller of the goods for the purpose of the contract, and that appropriation was found to be assented to by A. Held, also, that under cl. 13 of the contract the seller B obtained special property in the mate's receipts even though standing in the name of the buyer A, which would enable B to hold the documents as security for payment as against the real owner of the goods, and that there was nothing in the contract to show that the appropriation of the goods to the contract was intended by B to be other than final and absolute, that the sale and transfer to A was complete, and A had a right to dispose of the goods as owner, and in obtaining possession of the mate's receipts gained the means of exercising that right. Principal and agent—Goods ordered nett free godown—No remuneration fixed—Variance between printed and written terms—Liability to account. The plaintiffs sued to recover the balance due to them for goods delivered by them to the defendant under certain indents, the first clause of the printed portion of which ran as follows:—"$\frac{\text{We}}{\text{I}}$ hereby request and authorize you to order, and if possible, buy and send $\frac{\text{us}}{\text{me}}$ the undermentioned goods on $\frac{\text{our}}{\text{my}}$ account and risk and $\frac{\text{We}}{\text{I}}$ bind $\frac{\text{ourselves}}{\text{myself}}$ to pay for the same at the prices and conditions specified below." Other printed clauses provided that goods were to be landed by the defendant, who was to pay the import duty; the plaintiffs were not to be liable for damages though they might have advised the defendant of having placed the order, or any portion of it; the liability of the sellers and buyers, respectively, was to be the same as though a separate contract had been made out and signed in respect of each instalment, insurance was to be effected in Europe and the plaintiffs were to be free of all responsibility regarding it; the plaintiffs were not to be bound by any clauses or customs not specifically mentioned in the indent; and anything written in the indent form by the buyers in any language, other than English, except their signature, was to be null and void. To this indent form the following matter, inter aliâ, was added in writing:—" 12 Cases Ea/contg. 18 Pcs. of 25/130 yds. Plain Velvet 1421/18 at 1*s.* 9*d.* per yard. Nett free godown including duty. 60 days, 6 per cent. Int. after due date." The plaintiffs brought out the goods referred to in the indents and the defendant took delivery of a portion of the same, but refused to take delivery of the remainder. The defendant contended, by way of defence and counter-claim, that the plaintiffs were his commission agents for the purpose of purchasing goods in the European markets, and that they were bound to furnish an account of the difference, if any, between the cost price of the goods and the price mentioned in the indents. The lower Court, by an interlocutory judgment, held that the relation between the parties was that of principal and agent, and ordered the plaintiffs to furnish an account. The plaintiffs appealed. On appeal the preliminary objection was taken that the lower Court had erred in excluding evidence as to the custom of trade in Bombay. By an order dated the 7th March 1904 the suit was referred back to the lower Court in order that such evidence might be taken. On further hearing, after such evidence was taken: Held, that there was an inconsistency between the printed and the written provisions of the indent. The print, however, could not be discarded, but it was necessary to discover the real contract of the parties from the printed as well as from the written words." Gumm v. Tyrie, 33 L. J. (Q. B.) 97, 111, followed. Held, also, that according to the custom of trade in Bombay, when a merchant requests or authorizes a firm to order and to buy and send goods to him from Europe, at a fixed price, nett free godown, including duty, or free Bombay harbour, and no rate of remuneration is specifically mentioned the firm is not bound to account for the price at which the goods were sold to the firm by the manufacturer. 53. ———— Pakki Adat—Incidents of the custom—Employment for reward. The plaintiffs in Bombay bought and sold in Bombay cotton and other products on the orders of the defendant who traded at Shahada in Khandesh. In respect of the transactions sued on the plaintiffs before due date had entered into cross contracts of purchase with the merchants to whom they had originally sold goods on the defendant's account. The transactions were entered into on pakki adat terms. The contract of a pakka adatia in the circumstances of this case is one whereby he undertakes or guarantees that delivery should, on due date, be given or taken at the price at which the order was accepted or differences paid: in effect he undertakes or guarantees to find goods for cash or cash for goods or to pay the difference. The evidence in the case establishes the following propositions in connection with pakki adat dealing:—(i) That the pakka adatia has no authority to pledge the credit of the up-country constituent to the Bombay merchant and that no contractual privity is established between the up-country constituent and the Bombay merchant. (ii) That the up-country constituent has no indefeasible right to the contract (if any) made by the pakka adatia on receipt of the order, but the pakka adatia may enter into cross contracts with the Bombay merchant either on his own account or on account of another constituent, and thereby for practical purposes cancel the same. (iii) The pakka adatia is under no obligation to substitute a fresh contract to meet the order of his first constituent. Held, that the defendant knew of the custom, which was not unreasonable as it did not involve a conflict between the pakka adatia's interest and duty. On arrival at Agra the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company's Station Master demanded payment of higher rates, calculated per maund, and refused delivery until such rates were paid. The consignees paid under protests and sued both Railway Companies for a refund of the excess charges. Held, that the contract for carriage of the goods for the whole distance was one entire contract with the receiving Company, who were liable for the overcharge, if any, wrongfully demanded from the consignees. Muschamp v. *Lancaster and Preston Junction Railway Company, 8 M. & W. 421; 58 R. 1. CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACTS—contd.

I am bound to put up a board with the rates of fees to be collected by me and my name in English and Canarese in a public place in the market. If I, my agent, or servant were to act contrary to the above regulations, I shall be liable to pay a fine not exceeding R50 imposed by the President of the Taluk Board, or I am not entitled to object if my gutta is put up for auction again subject to the loss that may be sustained by the Taluk Board." Under the terms of the above contract, the President of the Taluk Board imposed on the defendant a fine of R20 on 4th November 1902 in respect of illegal excessive collections made by his agent. The defendant not having paid the fine, the President instituted a civil suit for the amount of the fine on 4th January 1904. Held, that the suit was maintainable, although the acts of the defendant's agent amounted to a criminal offence and no criminal proceedings were taken against the agent. It is doubtful whether the doctrine that a person injured by a felonious act cannot seek civil redress without prosecuting the felon in the Criminal Courts, applies in India; and the doctrine does not apply where a principal is sued in the Civil Courts in respect of the wrongful acts of his agent. Held, also, that the agreement in question was not a bail, bond or recognisance within the meaning of the exception to s. 74 of the Contract Act, and though given for the performance of a public duty, it was not given under the provisions of any law. The exception to s. 74 did not apply and the plaintiff was entitled to reasonable damages under the section. Held, also, that the suit was based on contract and for purposes of limitation fell within Art. 68 or 115 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act and not under Art. 6 of the Schedule. Held, further, that the penal clauses of ss. 162-C and 162-D of the Local Board's Act did not preclude the plaintiff from suing the defendant on his contract. 2. CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

1. ——— Intention to execute more formal contract—Final agreement, effect of. Where two parties have come to a final agreement, the mere fact that at the time of their doing so they intended to embody the terms of such agreement in a formal instrument does not make such agreement less binding on them. 2. ——— Intention to make more formal contract—Binding effect of preliminary agreement—Agreement to adjust suit, suit for damages for breach of. Even where formalities in the embodiment of contracts are at the option of the parties, there may be a concluded and binding contract, although there is an intention to put its terms into a more formal shape. The existence of such intention is evidence that neither party was to be bound until the intended formalities have been complied with. But when a sale, so as to pass an interest, requires certain formal steps, and nothing turns upon the intention of the parties, no inference against a concluded agreement can be drawn from the non-completion of formalities which are not of their selection. The parties to a suit executed a written agreement, which was duly registered, whereby the plaintiff agreed to accept the property of the defendant, specified in the agreement, in adjustment of the said suit. The agreement was not recorded under s. 98, Act VIII of 1859. The plaintiff proceeded with his suit, obtained a decree and sold the property mentioned in the agreement, in execution of the said decree. The sale-proceeds being insufficient to satisfy the decree, other property belonging to the defendant was attached and sold for R23,360. In a suit for damages brought by the defendant:—Held, that the agreements to withdraw the previous suit and to accept the properties of the present plaintiff in discharge of the claim were concluded agreements, and that, therefore, the present plaintiff was entitled with interest to the sum which property not mentioned in the agreement fetched at the sale under the decree obtained by the defendant. The plaintiffs stipulated that they would make no sales of goods of the same description to others before the 1st December 1881. The goods arrived in Calcutta between the 4th and 24th November 1881. On the 15th August the plaintiffs entered into other contracts with other buyers for the sale of the same description of goods at a lower price than that at which they had sold to the defendant, these contracts being on terms that the goods were not to arrive in Calcutta until after the 31st December 1881. In a suit to recover damages for breach of the contract by the defendant in not accepting the goods:—Held, that the stipulation not to sell the goods to others itself amounted to a condition precedent to the defendant's obligation to accept the goods, and therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to damages. In a suit by the purchaser from one of the parties to the partition suit against T, charging that he obstructed the pathway, etc., such obstruction being the not removing the privy:—Held (reversing the decision of the Court below), that the payment to T of the price of the removal was a condition precedent to the obligation on T to remove the privy. Under such circumstances, we hereby agree to pay you out of the said amount R680 within the end of May in the current year, and the remaining R680 within the end of May of the ensuing year 1852, and then to get the said deeds of sale endorsed by you and the 1½ virthis of land put into our possession as purchased by us. We will therefore pay the said amount of R1,360 in two instalments and take back this sanad along with the deeds of sale endorsed." In a suit for recovery of a sum of money alleged to be due under the agreement :—Held, that on the true construction of the contract it was not incumbent on the plaintiff to deliver, or aver readiness to deliver, the land to the defendants. The question whether covenants are dependent or independent, or whether a certain act is or is not a condition precedent, is entirely one of construction and to be determined in each case by educing the intention of the parties from the language they have used. 1. ——— Evidence of Contract—Material variation. C & Co. and H & Co. were merchants at Calcutta. H & Co. sold to C & Co. a large quantity of indigo through the medium of a broker, who drew up a sold note addressed to H & Co. and submitted it to H for his approval, when H having objected to a particular word remaining, the broker took the sold note to C and informed him of H's objection. C struck his pen through the word objected to by H, placing his initials over that erasure, and returned it to the broker, who thereupon delivered it, so altered, to H & Co. The broker delivered to C & Co. on the following day a bought note, which differed in certain material terms from the sold note. In an action brought by H & Co. against C & Co. for non-performance of the contract contained in the sold note, the Supreme Court at Calcutta was of opinion that the sold note alone formed the contract, and found for the plaintiff's. Held, by the Privy Council on appeal (reversing that decision), that the transaction was one of bought and sold notes, and that the circumstances attending C's alteration of the sold note, and affixing his initials, were not sufficient to make that note alone a binding contract; and that there being a material variation in the terms of the bought note with the sold note, they together did not constitute a binding contract. with whom the contract was really made—Specific Relief Act, ss. 31, 34—Damages for breach of contract, right of suit for. A contract intended to have been entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant was entered by a mistake on the part of the broker in the sold note, as having been made between a third person and the defendant. In a suit brought by the plaintiff on the contract, oral evidence was given to show that the contract was really made between the plaintiff and the defendant. The Judge of the Small Cause Court found that the mistake did not mislead the defendant, and gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff contingent on the opinion of the High Court as to whether the mistake in the sold note was a bar to the plaintiff's suit for damages on the contract. Held, that there was a contract between the parties for breach of which the plaintiff could sue for damages. 5. ——— Contract of sale—Want of assent—Broker's bought and sold notes. To contract through a broker, to sell a quantity of paddy at a price stated, the plaintiff firm signed the sold note. This was taken by the broker to the defendant firm, of which a member, before signing the bought note, wrote in Chinese characters, not understood by the vendor, a term as to quality. This was to the effect that the paddy was to be without yellow grains and not wet. A part delivery was made of paddy not answering this description. For this the defendant firm made a part payment at a reduced rate. Of the rest they refused to take delivery, when tendered, because it was not of the quality contracted for. Held, that the plaintiff's suit for the balance of the price of the part delivered, and for damages for non-acceptance of delivery of the rest, failed. If the plaintiffs—neither they nor their broker understanding Chinese—did not assent to the term written by the defendant, then there was no contract entered into to buy. If, on the contrary, the plaintiffs had assented to that term, then the paddy was not of the quality required by the contract. AH SHAIN SHOKE v. MOOTHIA CHETTY

6. ——— Bought and sold notes—Misrepresentation—Fraud, effect of—Right of plaintiff to fall back on original contract—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 91, 92 (1)—Damages for breach of contract. The plaintiff made a contract by telegram with the defendants for the purchase of a full cargo of kerosine oil, which the defendants had themselves contracted to buy from a firm of merchants in Calcutta. That firm declined to have their contract with the defendants transferred into the plaintiff's name and it was therefore arranged between the plaintiff and the defendants that bought and sold notes should be exchanged. In carrying out this arrangement the defendants misrepresented the amount of the cargo, and the words "100,000 cases" were inserted in the bought and sold notes, when the cargo really consisted of 125,000 cases of oil. Both the Courts below found that this misrepresentation was fraudulently made. The High Court in its Original Jurisdiction held that the bought and sold notes wre invalidated by the fraud and gave the plaintiff a decree for damages on his contract, as proved by the oral evidence. The High Court in appeal treated the case as founded on the bought and sold notes, and held that no other evidence of the contract could be given, and dismissed the suit. Held by the Privy Council, that the bought and sold notes having been falsified, the plaintiff was entitled to disregard them and fall back on his original contract. 6. CONTRACTS FOR GOVERNMENT SECURITIES OR SHARES.

1. ——— Contract to deliver Government paper—Wagering—Contract Act XXI of 1848. A Court will require strict evidence that a contract, per se legal, is intended to operate illegally. It is not necessary, in order to support a contract that the plaintiff should have possession of the Government paper when the contract is entered into; it is sufficient if he is in a position and is ready and willing to deliver it at due date. A letter, stating "the bearer will hand over to you R75,000 5½ loan notes" is sufficient to establish the bonâ fide nature of a transaction for purchase of Company's paper. had in his possession at the time fixed for the performance of the contract on his part such certificates of the shares contracted to be sold as were required by the law, and that he tendered the same with a deed of transfer to the purchaser, to effect the transfer; but that it was the duty of the purchaser himself, in such case, having accepted the shares, to have the transfer made into his name in the books of the company. 4. ——— Obligation to perform—Delivery and acceptance—Readiness and willingness. Where on the face of the contract, it did not appear that either party was called upon to act first, it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, unless he proved performance of, or an effort to perform, his part. In the absence of any indication on the part of the plaintiff that he was ready to deliver, the defendant is not liable for non-acceptance. The readiness and willingness on the part of the plaintiff must be substantial, something on which the defendant may act, not a readiness and willingness concealed in the plaintiff's mind. transfers nor applications for transfers signed by the original allottees were offered, nor had any such been executed, although the Corporation had opened transfer-books long before. Of the Mazagon Reclamation receipts, nine were endorsed by the allottees, one had no endorsement, and over the allottee of it and of another receipt plaintiffs had no power to enforce delivery. The Mazagon Reclamation Company had not opened transfer-books until long after the last day of delivery. On the issue whether plaintiffs were ready and willing to deliver the shares:—Held, as to the Alliance Financial shares, that plaintiffs, not being in a position to have constituted defendant as owner thereof, must fail in their suit in respect to them; and as to the Mazagon Reclamation shares that, although plaintiffs had done all that they were required to do by the usage of the market to transfer the interest in eight of them, yet the contract being an entire one, they must fail in respect to them also. If a party, bound to do an act upon request, is ready to do it when required, he will have performed his part of the contract, although he might have happened not to have been ready had he been called upon at some anterior period. Plaintiffs were in possession of the shares at the time of the contract, and continued so until they sold them after default made by defendants, and they were registered as holders of the shares on the 1st July, when the share certificates with transfer deeds in blank were tendered to defendants, who refused to accept them or to pay the purchase-money. On the issue whether plaintiffs were ready and willing to perform the contract on their part:—Held, that the acts necessary to be done on the 1st July were concurrent; and that plaintiffs, being able and willing on that day to make a valid transfer, if defendants had been ready to pay the price, were not bound to take any further steps until the purchase-money was paid by defendants. 7. WAGERING CONTRACTS.

1. ——— Wagers on price of opium at opium sales—Stat. 8 & 9 Vic., c. 109. By the common law of England, in force in India, an action may be maintained on a wager, although the parties had no previous interest in the subject-matter on which it is laid, if such wager be not against the interest or feelings of third parties, does not lead to indecent evidence, and is not contrary to public policy. The mere circumstance that a wager concerns the public revenue, or creates a temptation to do a wrong, will not render it illegal. A wager upon the average price which opium should fetch at the next Government sale at Calcutta, the plaintiffs having to pay the defendants the difference between such price and a sum named per chest, and the defendants having to pay the plaintiffs the difference between such price and the sum named, if the price should be above that sum, is not an illegal wager or contrary to public policy, though the proceeds of the opium sold at Calcutta formed part of the Government revenue. So held reversing the judgment of the Court at Bombay. The Stat. 8 & 9 Vic., c. 109, amending the law relating to games and wagers does not extend to India. 2. ——— Conspiracy—Fraud—Act XXI of 1848—Engrossing or Regrating. Wager contracts between the plaintiffs and defendants upon the price that Patna opium would fetch at the next Government sale at Calcutta: each party knowing that the other might use means to enhance or depress such price. Held, that the bidding at the sale by one of the plaintiffs, though done colourably, and, as it appeared, only to enhance the price, was no fraud on the defendants, or upon the public, as he had a right, in common with all the world, to bid at such sale, and was not precluded from recovering the amount of such wager contracts by the fact that such bidding tended to bring about the event by which the wager was to be won. Held, also, that employing agents at such sale (all of whom were cognizant that the object was to enhance the price of opium sold) to bid, there being no crimen falsi committed, did not constitute an illegal conspiracy, or such fraud as would vitiate the wager contracts. Levi v. Levi, 6 C. & P. 239, observed upon and questioned. The common law offence of engrossing or regrating applies only with respect to the necessaries of life. By the sixth article of the convention between Great Britain and France, the French Government had a right to demand, out of quantities sold at the Government sale, 300 chests of opium at the average rate of sale. Held, that no fraud on the vendors was committed by inducing the French Consul to exercise that option in favour of the plaintiffs. After the contracts were entered into, and an action commenced in the Supreme Court, wager contracts were declared invalid by the Act of the Indian Legislature, XXI of 1848, which enacted "that all agreements, whether made in speaking, writing or otherwise by way of gaming or wagering, shall be null and void, and no suit shall be allowed in any Court of law or equity for recovering any sum of money or valuable thing alleged to be won on any wager, or intrusted to any person, to abide the event of any game, or on which any wager is made." Held, that this Legislative Act did not affect existing contracts or action already commenced upon such contracts; there being no words in the Act sufficient to show the intention of the Legislature to affect existing rights. 4. ——— Partnership in wagering contracts—Act XXI of 1848—Bom. Act III of 1865—Suit by Agent for Brokerage. Act XXI of 1848 simply annuls all contracts by way of wagering, and prohibits any suit in respect of them, but does not declare them to be unlawful; and neither by the provisions of Act XXI of 1848 nor by Hindu law is the agent of a wagerer precluded from maintaining against the latter a suit for moneys paid by the agent to the other wagerer, or his agent, in respect of the loss of the wager, nor from recovering fees and brokerage due to him as agent in effecting, or for services in connection with, the wagering transaction. Motelall Heeralal v. Jumnadas Umrootlal, 2 Barr. Rep. 676, overruled. Bombay Act III of 1865 has not a retrospective force, and, therefore, applies neither to agreements collateral to wagering contracts entered into prior to its coming into operation, nor to interest subsequently accruing due on such agreements. Where the parties to an agreement (prior to the coming into force of Bombay Act III of 1865), collateral to a wagering transaction, stand to each other in the relationship of partners, and not merely of principal and agent, they are severally liable for contributions proportionate to their several shares, towards the losses incurred by the partnership in respect of such wagering transaction. Nor is such an agreement rendered illegal by s. 294A of the Penal Code. VASUDEVAN NAMBUDRI v. MAMMOD . I. L. R. 22 Mad. 212

7. ——— Contracts for forward delivery—Settlement by payment of differences. The defendant was sued by the plaintiffs as assignees of one S for "differences" on certain contracts of purchase and sale of cotton and seeds. The defendant contended that these contracts being in the nature of sutta, or wagering contracts, no suit would lie in respect of them. The defendant was not a dealer in produce, and entered into these contracts as a speculation. His modus operandi was, when he entered into a contract of purchase or sale, to sell or purchase again the same quantity, in one or more contracts, either with the original vendor, or some one else, so as to secure the profit, or ascertain the loss, before the "Vayda" day. The contracts were in the usual mercantile form, and were entered into through brokers, the principals not being brought into contact with each other until after the contract was made. S's procedure was also similar. S was a mukadam and guarantee broker to the plaintiffs ; and he, too, entered into these contracts as a speculation, intending to settle them before the "Vayda" day, but prepared, if forced to do so, to perform them in kind. Held, that the contracts sued on were not shown to have been agreements by way of wager. It was a highly speculative mode of doing business, but there is no law against speculation, as there is against gambling. Contracts are not wagering contracts, unless it be the intention of both contracting parties, at the time of entering into the contracts, under no circumstances to call for, or give delivery, from, or to, each other. In this case, even the defendant—seeing that he did not know with whom contracts might be made on his behalf by his brokers—must have contemplated the possibility of being called on to give, or take, delivery. 8. ——— Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Bombay Act III of 1865—Broker, suit by, for differences paid in respect of contracts made by him for defendant. Act III of 1865 (Bombay) is still in force, and has not been repealed by the Contract Act. Dayabhai v. Lakhmichand, I. L. R. 9 Bom. 358, followed. As between the original parties, a promissory note which has for its consideration a debt due on a wagering contract is void and, therefore, not binding in the hands of the original payee. Oulds v. Harrison, 10 Exch. 572, distinguished. In order to constitute a wagering contract, neither party should intend to perform the contract itself, but only to pay the differences. In order to ascertain the real intentions of the parties, the Court must look at all the surrounding circumstances, and will even go behind a written provision of the contract to judge for itself whether such provision was inserted merely for the purpose of concealing the real nature of the transaction. Tod v. Lakhmidas, I. L. R. 16 Bom. 441, Eshoor v. Venkatasubba, I. L. R. 17 Mad. 480, and Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan, [1896] A. C. 166, referred to. The defendant employed the plaintiff from time to time as a broker to purchase Government paper and shares of the Manekji Petit Spinning and Weaving Company. The plaintiff did so to the extent of many lakhs of rupees. No delivery was given or taken, but the differences only between the contract price and the price at the date of settlement (the Vadia day in each month) were paid or received by the defendant. The plaintiff now sued the defendant on two promissory notes given to the plaintiff by the defendant in respect of differences due by him in respect of the contracts thus made on his behalf. The defendant pleaded that he was not liable, the contracts being wagering contracts. It appeared from the evidence that the practice in the bazaar (which was followed in this case) was for brokers to enter into such contracts in their own name, and not to disclose the principals. The brokers became liable to give or take delivery. The defendant stated that he did not know the persons to whom the plaintiff sold or from whom he purchased. Held, (i) on the evidence that the defendant authorized the plaintiff as his broker to contract on his behalf, but in the plaintiff's own name, on the understanding that the defendant would indemnify the plaintiff and pay him brokerage in respect of the transactions entered into by him on behalf or for benefit of defendant. Accordingly the plaintiff did enter into contracts in his own name with third parties. The defendant was not directly a party to them, nor did his name appear anywhere in the contracts themselves. (ii) That the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the losses which he paid to third parties in respect of the contracts made by the plaintiff on the defendant's behalf, and that such losses were a valid consideration pro tanto for the notes sued upon. No doubt so far as the defendant was concerned, all the contracts were merely wagering or gambling transactions, but there was no evidence to show that, so far as the third parties were concerned, they were otherwise than genuine. The plaintiff was not, as between himself and the defendant, the principal in the transactions. He was merely the broker with a personal liability to the third parties. There was nothing to show that as between himself and the third parties the contracts were not perfectly genuine. The non-delivery and payment of differences on hand was a matter of subsequent arrangement. If he was liable to be called upon to receive or make actual delivery, then, in the absence of any express agreement to the contrary, a similar liability rested on the defendant himself, whatever might have been the defendant's own intentions. As the contracts between the plaintiff and the third parties were not void, so the contracts between the defendant and the plaintiff to indemnify the plaintiff in respect of these contracts were also valid. The mere fact that the plaintiff, knowing the defendant's position and means, must have inferred that he did not mean or intend to perform the contracts in specie, was not, per se, without more, sufficient to render the contracts invalid and not binding on the defendant. The inference of the plaintiff would not be, per se, a binding agreement. PEROSHA CURSETJI v. MANIKJI DOSSABHOY . I. L. R. 22 Bom. 899

9. ———— Contracts to buy and sell Government promissory notes—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Onus of proof. A, on various occasions, agreed to sell to B (a soukar) certain amounts of Government of India promissory notes, amounting in all to 4½ lakhs for delivery on the following 30th of November. On the 28th of November, B agreed to sell, and A to buy, 4½ lakhs worth of the notes for delivery on the 30th November. A did not perform his contract to sell, and B sued him for damages, amounting to R7,109-6-0, being the difference between the price at which he (B) had agreed to buy, and the price at which he had agreed to sell. B denied that the transactions were bonâ fide contracts made in the ordinary way of business, and pleaded that the real contract was only to pay differences as ascertained by the price of the Government paper on the 30th of November, and that such a contract, being by way of wager, was void under s. 30 of the Contract Act. Held, on the evidence, that neither party intended bonâ fide purchases and sales for delivery, and that, therefore, the contract was void as a wagering contract. Held, on appeal, that the burden of proof that the agreements were wagers, i.e., that they were not in substance what they were in form, lay on A, as the party so alleging. Per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J., that, it being proved on the evidence that it was the defendant's intention at the time he contracted to sell to pay differences only, the plaintiff either knew of this intention or he did not. by defendants to enter into cotton transactions on their behalf at Dholera. The contracts for the sale and purchase of cotton were made on terms contained in a printed form which incorporated the rules framed by the cotton merchants of Dholera. These rules expressly provided for the delivery of cotton in every case and forbade all gambling in differences. In spite of these rules, and the express terms of the contracts, the course of dealings was such that none of the contracts were ever completed except by payment of differences between the contract price and the market price in Bombay on the Vaida day. The plaintiff entered into numerous transactions of this kind on the defendants' behalf. He now sued to recover from them the balance due to him on account of brokerage, commission, and losses incurred in the said transactions. Held, that the transactions were a mere gambling for differences, and no suit would lie, under Bombay Act III of 1865, to recover any of the items connected with such transactions. In order to determine whether a contract is a wagering contract, the Court will not only look at the terms of the written contract, but also probe among the surrounding circumstances to find out the true intentions of the parties. Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan, [1896] A. The plaintiff deposited R100 with the defendant as part payment of the purchase money. Subsequently it was ascertained that the dividend had been already declared on 17th January 1883 (i.e., four days before the contract) at R25. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant to have the contract declared cancelled, and sought to recover the deposit of R100, with interest. applied to the High Court, under its extraordinary jurisdiction, to set aside the lower Court's decision. Held, that, in the first instance, the plaint, as framed, not disclosing any cause of action, ought to have been returned for amendment. It should either have alleged a mistake common to both parties to the contract or should have contained an allegation of fraud, on the defendant's part, inducing the plaintiff to enter into the agreement. The mere circumstance that the contract was "caused by one of the parties to it being under a mistake as to a matter of fact" would not, under s. 22 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), have made the contract voidable. Held, also, that, if the contract was really a wager, the deposit could not be recovered under s. 65 of the Contract Act, as its nature must from the first have been known to the parties. To an agreement, so known to be void, s. 65 does not apply. If the contract was in the intention of both parties a wager, the suit would be barred by s. 1 of Bombay Act III of 1865, which, though it formed a part of Act XXI of 1848, which is repealed by the Contract Act, is not, being a special Act applicable to the Bombay Presidency, itself repealed. It must be read with s. 30 of the Contract Act. Held, also, that to constitute a wager, the transaction between the parties must "wholly depend on the risk in contemplation," and "neither party must look to anything but the payment of money on the determination of an uncertainty." But if one of the parties has "the event in his own hands," the transaction is not a wager. If the plaintiff's real contention was that defendant was aware of a declaration of dividends at R25 per share, and by keeping plaintiff in ignorance of the facts induced him to enter into a wagering agreement for payment of differences at a contract rate of R37 per share, then to a suit for the recovery of the deposit made to the defendant with reference to such an agreement, Bombay Act III of 1885 has no application. Wagering contracts are not illegal. They are simply destitute of legal effect. If fraud was practised on plaintiff, the maxim potior est conditio defendentis would not apply. There is no distinction between the expression "gaming and wagering" in the English Gaming Act, 1845, and the earlier Indian Act, XXI of 1848, and the expression "by way of wager" used in s. 30 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872). Transactions for the purchase and sale of goods comprised two classes of contracts—the one class, suitable to traders, such as the defendants were, and all duly fulfilled by delivery and payment, and the other class extravagantly large and left without any attempt at fulfilment. Held, that the inference was that in the latter class the parties never intended completion, but that the contracts were for differences only; and, where such differences formed the consideration for which a promissory note was given, the plaintiffs could not recover in a suit on the note. The Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan, *[1896] A. (a) ALTERATION BY PARTY.

1. ——— Addition of words to contract—Sale of goods. R G G & Co. entered into a contract to sell certain goods to A S, N S, both Calcutta firms. The contract, which was in a printed English form, was taken on the 18th December 1868 by one M, on behalf of the firm of R G G & Co., to obtain the signature of the vendee's firm. It was signed on their behalf by A S. Neither M nor A S understood English, and no explanation was given of the terms of the contract to A S at the time he signed it, but there had been negotiations between M and A S as to these goods prior to the time when A S's signature was obtained. It did not appear that the goods had been identified in any way by the purchasers, who had merely seen a sample. After his signature, A S wrote in Nagri, "Goods fresh grenadines five cases at two annas and three pie per yard." A S, N S, afterwards, on the 9th February 1869, paid R1,000 as earnest money, which was accepted by R G G & Co., who then allowed further time for taking delivery of the goods, which, however, A S, N S, finding some of the goods were stained, declined to do. R G G & Co. thereupon brought an action for breach of contract in not taking delivery, and a cross-suit was brought by A S, N S, to recover the R1,000 paid as earnest money. Held, that the

2. ——— Signature—Repudiation—Statute of Frauds. The plaintiffs contracted with the defendant for the purchase from him of a certain quantity of hog's lard. The terms of the contract were contained in a letter, which was drafted by the plaintiffs and sent to the defendant for signature. The defendant returned the letter unsigned, with two additional clauses. The plaintiffs, not being able to agree to one of these clauses, had an interview with the defendant, when the defendant took the document away with him, and subsequently on 17th May returned it signed, but with the additional clauses still remaining. The plaintiffs had another interview with the defendant on 5th June, during which the additional clause objected to by the plaintiffs was struck out, one of the plaintiffs writing the word "cancelled" against that clause, and the defendant putting his initials against the word "cancelled." The plaintiffs then added to the contract the words "approved," together with "R and C," being the initials of their firm. Other alterations had been made in the document, and, it containing many erasures, the plaintiffs on the same day sent a fair copy to the defendant for signature, but the defendant wrote repudiating the alleged contract, and refusing to sign the document. Held (confirming the decision of the Court below), that there was no binding contract between the parties. The signature of the defendant put to the document on 17th May was not a sufficient signature by the party to be charged so as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. CHARRIOL v. SHIRCORE . . . 8. B. The forgery having been established, the Court of first instance dismissed the suit as against all the three defendants, and this decision was affirmed on appeal. On second appeal to the High Court :—Held, that the decision was correct, as a material alteration in a bond is, if fraudulently made, sufficient to render the bond void. A party who has the custody of an instrument made for his benefit is bound to preserve it in its original state, and any material alteration of it will vitiate the instrument. Where a person brings a suit upon a document which, when produced in evidence, is found to have been fraudulently altered to the knowledge of the plaintiff, no Court ought to allow an amendment to enable him to succeed upon it in its original state. 13. ——— Fraudulent alteration of document, effect of—English law how far applicable in mofussil. In a suit brought to recover R815, principal and interest due according to the terms of a registered mortgaged bond, it was found that the plaintiff had fraudulently altered the terms of the bond prior to registration (i) by inserting a condition making the whole sum payable upon default of payment of any instalment, and (ii) by doubling the rate of interest. The defendant admitted in his written statement that he had received a certain portion of the consideration for the bond from the plaintiff. At the trial the plaintiff claimed to amend the plaint and recover the first instalment according to the terms of the bond as executed by defendant. Held by the Full Bench (KERNAN, *Offg. C. 14. ——— Alteration in material part—Effect of alteration as vitiating document—Vesting of interest by execution of mortgage instrument. By an agreement entered into between plaintiff and defendants' predecessors in title plaintiff undertook to sell and convey certain lands to the purchasers and to allow half the purchase-money to remain at interest for three years on security of the lands sold. Plaintiff's mother was alive, as also his son, who was then a minor. In order to protect the purchasers from any claims by the said mother or son as against the lands so agreed to be sold, plaintiff further agreed to give the purchasers a bond indemnifying them from any such or other claims. Plaintiff, in pursuance of the said agreement, duly executed a conveyance of the lands ; he also gave the purchasers an indemnity in respect of claims by his mother as against the lands. The purchasers executed a mortgage over the lands in plaintiff's favour, in which the indemnity to be furnished by plaintiff was at first referred to in general terms, but the document concluded with the words, "a security should be furnished for this sum on account of the minor only." The balance of purchase-money so secured not having been paid, plaintiff brought a suit for the sale of the mortgaged land, and before doing so tendered an indemnity protecting the defendants against any claims that might be made as against the lands by the plaintiff's said minor son. It was found that the words "for the minor only" had been added to the mortgage instrument after its execution. On its being contended that the alteration was a material one and vitiated the document, and that the suit, being based on the altered document, must fail, and that the tender of a general guarantee as originally agreed upon was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to sue:—Held, per COLLINS, C.J., and BENSON, J. (in an order calling for a finding as to whether the alteration had been made with the mortgagor's consent), that the mortgage instrument having provided for security to be given by plaintiff in general terms, the addition of the words "for the minor only" restricted the liability of the property to be given by plaintiff as security to claims made by the said minor son. It diminished the guarantee to be given by plaintiff against claims by the mother or others. It was thus an alteration in a material part of the document, and would vitiate it as a basis for the plaintiff's suit unless the plaintiff could show that the alteration had been made with the consent of the mortgagors, who executed the document. The finding of the lower Court was that the alteration had been made without the mortgagor's consent. Held, SUBRAMANIA AYYAR, Offg. C. J., and MOORE, J. (O'FARRELL, J., dissenting), that on the execution of the mortgage instrument any interest in the property comprised therein at once became vested in the plaintiff; that such interest was not, and could not have been, divested from him by the subsequent addition of the words referred to, and that in asking for the sale of the land plaintiff was seeking to enforce, not a right resting on the contract or covenant, but one arising by operation of law with reference to the vested interest created by the instrument having been executed; that, though reference was made in the plaint to the provisions relating to the mortgage instrument in its altered state, such reference was not an essential part of plaintiff's cause of action, and that the suit was not necessarily based on the altered instrument; that the execution of a security bond in terms of the mortgage instrument before it was altered was not a condition precedent, and the suit was sustainable, though no such security had been given before the institution of the suit; and that (the question of damages not arising) plaintiff was entitled to a decree on the mortgage instrument, which would also provide that he must furnish a proper security bond before an order absolute would be passed. Per O'FARRELL, J.—That, inasmuch as the suit was based, not on the transferred right, but on the altered document, and as no obligation had as yet attached under the unaltered document, the suit should be dismissed; that the defendants' liability was contingent upon the prior execution by plaintiff of a general guarantee and not of the limited one which he, relying on the fraudulent alteration, had tendered; that where an agreement has, as to one of the parties, been wholly executed, the altered contract may be given in evidence of the correlative obligations incurred by the other party; but that here the agreement, so far as it related to repayment of the purchase-money, was executory and contingent upon the fulfilment by the plaintiff of the prior obligation to execute a proper guarantee; and that a conditional decree upon a proper security bond being executed could not be given. material particular—Effect of such alteration. A puisne mortgagee brought a suit for sale against his mortgagors on two mortgages, and impleaded therein as defendants the heirs of a prior mortgagee. As to this prior mortgage, the plaintiff stated in his plaint:—"The plaintiff has now learnt that the defendant No. 1, Tajammul Husain Khan had made a prior mortgage of a four biswa share in mauza Saiyid Nagar alias Nayagaon, Pargana Bilari, to Bhagwan Das under a registered bond, dated the 7th August, 1886, for R1,000. Bhagwan Das is dead. The defendants Nos. 3 to 6 are his heirs. As the plaintiff has a right to redeem on payment of R1,000 the prior debt, or of the amount which may be found due to the defendants Nos. 3 to 6, he is entitled to get the entire property sold by auction and to recover the whole amount," And the plaintiff prayed "that in case of default in payment (by the mortgagors) of R1,000, or whatever may be found due to the defendants Nos. 3 to 6, the plaintiff may be asked to pay that sum; and the entire hypothecated property may be sold by auction, and the whole amount of the prior incumbrance which the plaintiff might have to pay, and also the entire amount claimed, and costs and interest up to date of payment, may be satisfied out of the sale-proceeds." The prior mortgagees brought the mortgage deed of the 7th of August, 1886, into Court, and claimed that R6,764, principal and interest, were payable thereunder. The bond, when produced, was found to have been tampered with and altered in a material particular, the extent of the share mortgaged having been increased. Held by STANLEY, C.J., and BANERJI, J. (dissentiente AIKMAN, J.), that such alteration did not render the instrument void in toto so as to justify a Court in ignoring its existence and passing a decree in favour of the plaintiff for sale of the property comprised in it without payment of the amount due under it, or any part of that amount. tained in Act XXVIII of 1855, that any rate of interest which the parties may have agreed upon shall be awarded, in no way prevents a Civil Court in India, which administers both law and equity, from examining into the character of agreements made between persons, such as mortgagor and mortgagee, trustee and cestui que trust, between whom a relation exists, enabling one party to take advantage of the other, and from declining to enforce such agreements when they are shown to be unfair and extortionate. 25. ——— Suit to set aside agreement—Failure of Consideration. A person cannot sue to set aside an agreement under which he has lent money on security of a lease of land subject to extension in the event of deficiency in the assets, unless he shows such gross and excessive deficiency in the assets as amounts to a failure of the consideration and deprives him of the security for his money, and unless he also shows that this deficiency was caused by the representations of the party to whom he lent the money, and in spite of due care and diligence on his own part. 30. ——— Execution of deed obtained by Misrepresentation—Cancellation of signature—Contract Act, ss. 18 and 19—Breach of duty—Ordinary diligence. The firm of Nicol & Co. having suspended payment, a general meeting of creditors was convened, at which it was unanimously resolved that the business of the firm should be wound up by voluntary liquidation under the supervision of a committee ; and that the winding up should be conducted by two trustees under the supervision and control of the said committee. At a subsequent meeting of the creditors the above resolutions were confirmed, and it was further resolved that a composition-deed should be prepared in pursuance of the terms of the above resolutions. The adoption of this last resolution was strongly pressed upon the meeting by the solicitor for the insolvent firm on the ground that the mode of procedure therein proposed was proposed solely in the interest of the creditors. He entirely repudiated the idea that the members of the firm were to obtain any benefit by the proposed measure. No mention was made at either of the meetings of any release to be given to the parties. The plaintiffs were creditors of Nicol & Co., and R. S. and B were their respective agents in Bombay. R, S, and B attended the said meetings on the plaintiffs' behalf, and were appointed members of the committee of supervision and control. A few days after the last-mentioned meeting, M, one of the partners of the insolvent firm, called upon R, who at the time was deeply engaged in pressing an important business. M produced a deed which had been prepared by the solicitors of the firm, and which contained a clause by which the creditors, in consideration of the assignment of the estate to trustees, released and discharged the members of the firm from all claims. M was aware of the existence of the release in the deed. He asked R to execute the deed stating that it was "the trust deed." R requested M to leave the document, saying that he would go over it and return it in the course of the day. M then earnestly pressed him to execute the document at once, stating that it was of the utmost importance that no time should be lost, as the native

creditors were coming to his office, and that it was necessary that all the members of the committee of supervision should sign first. R objected to sign the document without reading it, and M thereupon led him to suppose that the deed only carried out what was agreed to at the creditor's meeting. Upon the faith of that assurance, R executed the deed on behalf of the first plaintiffs in the belief that it was nothing more than an assignment to trustees for the benefit of creditors. Subsequently, on the same day, M took the deed to S, and asked him to sign. S was also engaged in pressing business, and asked M to leave the deed for perusal; but M gave the same reason for not doing so that he had given to R, and further stated that R had signed, and that he (M) hoped that S would also sign. S glanced at the deed, and being assured by M that it was in order, thereupon on the faith of that assurance, and believing that the deed was nothing more than an assignment of the estate to the trustees, executed the deed on behalf of the second plaintiffs without reading it. M on the same day took the deed, with the signature of R and S attached thereto, to B, who was also engaged in pressing business, and asked him to sign it. After some conversation B said to M: "The deed, then, is merely an assignment of the firm's effects for the creditors," and M replied in the affirmative. B then on behalf of the third plaintiffs executed the deed without reading it believing it to be merely an assignment of the estate to the trustees. On the 15th October, R and B heard that the deed contained a release by the creditors to the debtors, and on the 16th October S was also for the first time informed of it. On the 16th October R and S wrote a letter to M, repudiating their signatures, and refusing to be bound by the deed; and on the 26th October, B caused a similar letter to be written to M's solicitor. The plaintiffs sued to have the signatures of their said agents and managers severally cancelled, and to have it declared that the deed was not binding on the plaintiffs. Held, that, having regard to what passed at the meetings of creditors, the deed, so far as it operated as a release, was a different deed from that which R, S, and B either intended to execute, or thought they were executing when they affixed their signatures, and that not having read the deed, but having trusted to M to inform them as to its contents, their signatures could not be held to be a consent to its contents, and that, therefore, so far as the deed operated as a release, their signatures were null. Held, also, that under the special circumstances of the case it became the duty of M to communicate to R, S, and B the existence of the release, and that, not having done so, he committed a breach of duty such as is comtemplated by cl. 2 of s. 18 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). Held, also, that, under the circumstances, R, S, and B had not the means of discovering the truth with ordinary

A 4-anna share of the profits, after deducting Government revenue and expenses, was to go in payment of interest on the money lent; half of the remaining three-fourths to go towards payment of the principal, and the other half to the defendants. If at the end of the term any balance remained due to the plaintiff, the defendants were to pay it with interest at 18 per cent. If the defendants failed to give the ijara, they agreed to pay the amount borrowed with interest at 6¼ per cent. per mensem. The account, on a cadjan, was for R315 payable with 12 per cent. interest within fifteen days, and in default plaintiff to be paid, on 14th November 1876, paddy for the amount due calculated at the rate of 4 annas 7 pies per para. Immediately after the execution of this agreement the price of rice rose, the defendant did not pay within the fifteen days, and in the plaint in this suit the price of rice was calculated at 8 annas per para. Held, that the bargain was unconscionable. Under the Contract Act, s. 74, in a case falling within its terms only reasonable compensation could be given, which in the present case would be interest at a somewhat high rate. Where a fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary relation had existed, Courts of Equity have invariably placed the burden of sustaining the transaction upon the party benefited by it, requiring him to show that it was of an unobjectionable character and one which it ought not to disturb. stands upon a general principle applying to all the variety of relations in which dominion may be exercised by one person over another. The plaintiff, who on the death of the widow of his brother became entitled to the estate of the deceased, found himself resisted in his claim by wealthy relatives. He was a man without means. The defendant took him to his house, kept him there, found him all the money for the purpose of carrying on his litigation with his relatives, in which the plaintiff succeeded. While the litigation for mutation of names in respect of the property was pending in the Revenue Court, and while plaintiff was residing with the defendant, he executed the sale deed in favour of defendant's brother for the nominal consideration of R9,500, or half the property he claimed: and again, shortly after the mutation case had terminated in his favour, he executed a deed of endowment of the remaining half in favour of a temple founded by the ancestor of the defendant, and in which the defendant was interested, and the result was that plaintiff was left as poor as he was when he first came into the defendant's hands. Plaintiff sued for cancellation of the deed of endowment, on the ground that the same had been obtained from him by the exercise of undue influence and by means of fraud, and obtained a decree. On appeal by the defendant it was held that, looking at all the facts, such a relation between plaintiff and defendant in the course of the year 1885 had been established as to cast upon the latter the obligation of satisfying the Court that the transaction, which was given effect to by the deed of endowment, was an honest bonâ fide transaction and one that ought to be upheld. to sell their land at a gross undervalue, viz., one-third of the amount of the mortgage debt, which in itself was not more than equal to half the value of the annual produce of the land, and to remain liable to the remaining two-thirds of that debt with interest, and even if no default should occur on their parts in payment of a moiety of the annual produce, or the performance of their other covenants, and notwithstanding full payment of the principal, to continue for fifteen years to pay the half produce of the lands to the mortgagees:—Held (reversing the decrees of both the Courts below), that the deed of mortgage should only stand as security for the payment of the principal sum of R300, and interest at 9 per cent., and in all other respects should be set aside as inequitable, fraudulent, and grossly oppressive. Held, also, that if in execution of the reversed decrees the lands had been made over to the mortgagees as purchasers, they should be restored to the mortgagors, and that the rents, profits and produce received by the mortgagees while in possession should be set off on account against the said principal sum and interest, and that the balance should be paid by the party against whom the same might be found. Mere inadequacy of consideration, unless it be so great as to amount to evidence of fraud, is not sufficient ground for setting aside a contract, or refusing to decree specific performance of it. But inadequacy of consideration when found in conjunction with any such other circumstances as suppression of true value of property, misrepresentation, fraud, surprise, oppression, urgent necessity for money, weakness of understanding or even ignorance, is an ingredient which weighs powerfully with a Court of Equity in considering whether it should set aside contracts, or refuse to decree specific performance of them. yet as a general rule, before the defendant is called upon to prove that he has given full value for property sold to him, the plaintiff must first make out that the parties to the bargain were dealing on terms so unequal as to render it improper for a Court of Justice to enforce any contract they may have made, unless it can be shown that the contract was in fact one which a prudent person with proper advice and assistance might well have made. 46. ——— Unconscionable bargain—Interest—"Dharta"—Illiterate Agriculturist. The High Court as a Court of Equity possesses the power exercised by the Court of Chancery of granting relief in cases of such unconscionable or grossly unequal and oppressive bargains as no man of ordinary prudence would enter into, and which, from their nature and the relative positions of the parties, raise a presumption of fraud or undue influence. The principles upon which such relief is granted apply to contracts in which exceedingly onerous conditions are imposed by money-lenders upon poor and ignorant persons in rural districts. The exercise of such power has not been affected by the repeal of the usury laws. Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Ves. 155, O'Rorke v. *Bolingbroke, L. R. 2 Ap. An illiterate Kurmi in the position of a peasant proprietor executed a mortgage-deed in favour of a professional money-lender to whom he owed R97, by which he agreed to pay interest on that sum at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum at compound interest. He further agreed that "dharta" or a yearly fine at the rate of one anna per rupee should be allowed to the mortgagee, to be calculated by yearly rests. It was also provided that the interest should be paid from the profits of certain malikana land of the mortgagor, and that, if the interest were not paid for two years, the mortgagee should be put in possession of this land. As security for the debt, a six pies zemindari share was mortgaged for a term of eleven years. The effect of the stipulation as to "dharta" was that one anna per rupee would be added at the end of every year, not only to the principal mortgage-money, but also to the interest due, and the total would be again regarded as the principal sum for the ensuing year. Ten years after the date of the mortgage, the mortgagor brought a suit for redemption on payment of only R97 or such sum as the Court might determine as due to the mortgagee. At that time the accounts made up by the mortgagee showed that the debt of R97 with compound interest had swollen to R873, of which the "dharta" alone amounted to R111. Held, that the stipulation in the deed as to "dharta" was not of the kind referred to in s. 74 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), and that there was no question of penalty, but that, looking to the relative positions of the parties, and the unconscionable and oppressive nature of the stipulation, the benefit thereof should be disallowed to the mortgagee and the mortgagor permitted to redeem on payment of the mortgage-money and interest, no appeal having been preferred by him from the decree of the first Court making redemption subject to the payment of interest. withstanding that ample security was given by mortgage of landed property. It was also found that, although, under the terms of the bond, the plaintiff had power to enforce the same at any time by bringing to sale the mortgaged property, he had wilfully allowed the debt to remain unsatisfied, in order that compound interest at a high rate might accumulate. Held, that the bargain was a hard and unconscionable one, which the Court had undoubted power to refuse to enforce, and which, under all the circumstances, it would be unreasonable and unequitable for a Court of justice to give full effect to; and that, under the circumstances, compound interest should not be allowed. Kamini Sundari Chaodhrani v. *Kali Prosunno Ghose, I. 48. ——— Contract to pay Expenses of Litigation. The result of the English cases regarding "hard" or "unconscionable bargains" is that in dealings with expectant heirs, reversioners, or remaindermen, the fact that the bargain was declined by others as not being sufficiently advantageous, does not raise a presumption that it was fair and reasonable; and that until the contrary is satisfactorily proved by the party trying to maintain the bargain, the Court may presume that a bargain which apparently provides, in the opinion of the Court, for an unusually high return or or an exceptionally high rate of interest is a hard and unconscionable bargain against which relief should be granted. The doctrine of equity on the subject of such bargains is applicable in England only to dealings with expectant heirs, reversioners, or remaindermen. The judgment of the Privy Council in Kamini Sundari Chaodhrani v. Kali Prosunno Ghose, I. L. R. 12 Calc. 225 : L. R. 12 I. A. 215, does not imply that the doctrine is to be applied in India to cases except where it would have been applied in England, or except where the case is in some way analogous to a case of snatching a bargain with an expectant heir, reversioner, or remainderman, or except there is some fiduciary relationship between the lender and the borrower, although there may be no fraud or undue influence, or except there is some incapacity, such as ignorance, on the part of the borrower to appreciate the true effect of his bargain. For the purposes of meeting the expenses of an appeal to the High Court, the appellant, on the advice of his legal advisers, executed a bond for R25,000 in consideration of the obligee agreeing to defray such expenses. The obligor agreed to pay the R25,000 within one year from his recovering possession of the property in suit; and, at the request of the obligor's pleader, the obligee advanced R3,700, which was applied to the expenses of the appeal. The High Court dismissed the appeal; and in a deed executed by the obligor in favour of the obligee and others for the purpose of defraying the expenses of a further appeal to the Privy Council, he admitted his liability under the former bond. The Privy Council decreed his appeal, and he obtained possession of the property in suit, but declined to pay the R25,000 upon which the obligee sued upon the bond. It was found that, apart from the moneys borrowed by the obligor from time to time, he was without even the means of subsistence; that he executed the bond with his eyes open and perfectly understood his position and the effect of both the instruments executed by him; that no fraud or improper pressure appeared to have been allowed to him; that his legal advisers had acted honestly and to the best of their ability in his interests; that there was nothing to show that, having regard to the risks of the litigation, he could have obtained the assistance necessary for the prosecution of his appeal on better terms than those contained in the bond; that without such assistance he could not have appealed to the High Court; and that the obligee gave him such assistance upon his application. Held, that, although there was nothing to show that the obligor could have obtained an advance on terms more advantageous to himself, it was for the obligee to establish to the Court's satisfaction, without reasonable doubt, that he could not have done so; and that, this not having been established, and the reasonableness and fairness of the bargain not being proved by showing that there had been difficulties in negotiating it, or that others had refused it as not sufficiently advantageous to them, the Court should hold the bargain to be a hard and unconscionable one, which should not be enforced. The Court gave the plaintiff a decree for the R3,700 actually advanced, with simple interest at 20 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond to the date of the decree, with costs in proportion and interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the R3,700, interest and costs, from the date of the decree until payment. 49. ——— Gambling in litigation—Agreement opposed to public policy—Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act), s. 23. For the purpose of meeting the expenses of an appeal to the Privy Council from concurrent decrees of the Subordinate Judge and the High Court, the plaintiff-appellant executed a deed of sale of certain property worth over R50,000 in consideration of the vendees providing the necessary security and moneys. The plaintiff experienced considerable difficulty in procuring the means of appeal. The vendees were not professional money-lenders, they did not put pressure on the plaintiff, but, on the contrary, he and his agent put pressure on them to agree to the terms of the deed. It appeared that, apart from the moneys borrowed by him from time to time, he was without even the means of subsistence; that he fully understood the nature of the deed; that his agents negotiated the transaction bonâ fide, and to the best of their powers, in his interest; that there was no fraud or deception on the part of the venders, and that they performed all that they undertook as regards meeting the expenses of the appeal. Under the deed, the plaintiffs were liable to furnish security to the extent of R4,000 and to advance R8,500 for other necessary expenses, and they did in fact furnish such security and advanced sums aggregating R7,542. The appeal was successful. The appellant having failed to put the vendees in possession of the property conveyed by the deed, and recovered by him under the Privy Council's decree, the vendees sued him for possession of the property and mesne profits, afterwards agreeing that the Court should in lieu thereof award them compensation in money equivalent thereto. Held, that, although the case was very different from cases in which persons interfered for their own benefit in litigation not their own, or in which mukhtars, vakils, or persons of that class of professional money-lenders, taking advantage of the borrower's position, sued to enforce a contract obtained by them from him, and, although the defendant was not entitled to sympathy, yet, judging by the disproportion between the liability incurred by the plaintiffs under the contract and the reward which they were to obtain in the event of defendant's success, it must be concluded either that they did not believe his claim to be well founded, and consequently entered, though unwillingly, into a gambling transaction, or, if they believe the claim to be well founded, that the reward contracted for was excessive and unconscionable; and in either case the contract could not be enforced in its terms. Held, also, that, if the doctrine of equity applicable to such cases were applied in favour of the borrower, it should also be applied in favour of the lender; that as there was no reason to suspect the plaintiff's motives, it would be inequitable to relieve the defendant from all liability; that it was only fair that he should compensate the plaintiffs for the use of their security bonds from the date when they were deposited in the High Court to the earliest date after the judgment of the Privy Council when the plaintiffs could have obtained them back; that simple interest at 12 per cent. per annum on the amounts of the bonds for the period would be reasonable compensation for such use; that the defendant should also repay the amounts advanced by the plaintiffs for the expenses of the litigation with interest on each advance at 20 per cent. from the date on which it was made to the date of the decree in the present case; and that he should pay interest on the whole

It was found by the Civil Judge that the fifteenth defendant's son was engaged to be married to the second plaintiff's daughter, and that the marriage was broken off on the part of the fifteenth defendant. Held, on special appeal, that this was primâ facie a breach of the agreement which entitled the plaintiff to recover, and that it was for the defendants to show that it did not bring them within the terms of the agreement. 4. ——— Contract for sale of seed—Excess refraction. A contract for the sale of seed contained the following provision :—"Refraction guaranteed at four per cent., with usual allowance up to six per cent., exceeding which the seller is to reclean the seed at his expense within a week ; failing which, buyers to have the option of cancelling that portion of the contract tendered, or of buying against the seller, or of taking the parcel as it stands, with usual allowance for excess refraction. Delivery from seller's godown in pile up to the 15th of July next." On the 10th July, the vendor tendered the seed. On examination the refraction was found to be above the contract rate. It was agreed that the vendor should reclean the seed ; and on the 15th July, the purchasers went to take delivery of the seed, which was found still to be not sufficiently cleaned. On the 15th July, the vendor said that he should require a week longer for that purpose. The purchasers then cancelled the contract. In a suit by the vendor for damages for breach of contract :—Held, (i) that the breach of the contract was with the plaintiff ; (ii) that the week allowed for recleaning commenced from the 10th July ; and that, as the plaintiff had not succeeded in reducing the rate of refraction to the contract rate, the defendants had a right to reject the seed ; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to further time to reclean it again. 5. ——— Agreement to deliver goods at specified place—Tender of goods—Right to rescind contract. If a person contracts to deliver goods at a specified place, he must be there in person or by agent, and be ready to deliver them ; if to deliver them by a certain time, he must tender them so as to allow sufficient time for examination and receipt. But when a thing is to be performed at a certain place, on or before a certain day, to another party to a contract, the tender must be to the other party at that place, and that other party must be present at some particular part of the day before sunset, so that the act may be completed by daylight. Where a thing is to be done anywhere, a tender at a convenient time before midnight is sufficient. In case of violation of a contract by one party, the other party may ordinarily rescind it totally or partially, provided he himself is guilty of no default or violation, and exercises the right within a reasonable time. If, after default of the other party, he does an act recognizing the contract, he cannot afterwards rescind it. KARTICK NATH PANDEY v. GOVERNMENT . . 11 W. R. 58

9. ——— Difference between articles contracted for and those tendered—Action for non-acceptance. The plaintiffs contracted to supply the defendants with from 275,000 to 300,000 of gunny bags described as No. 6 quality, size 40 by 28 inches, "the defendants to have the option of taking bags of a longer or shorter length at proportionate prices, duly giving a fortnight's notice to the plaintiffs, delivery to be taken in August 1870." The defendants, after taking delivery of 11,600 of the bags, found that the bags tendered were mixed in size, some being longer and some being shorter than the contract size, and refused to take delivery of the remainder. In an action for breach of contract in not accepting the bags, the Court below found on the evidence that out of 2,000 bags which were examined, 100 were short by from a quarter to half an inch, but that the bags which were really short were very few out of a large quantity which came up to contract size, and held, therefore, that there had been a substantial performance of the contract on the part of the plaintiffs. On appeal, the Court found that the parties did not contemplate any large margin of difference in the size of the bags, and that the proportion of those which differed was large enough to justify the defendants in refusing to take delivery, and held that the tender of such bags by the plaintiffs was not a substantial performance of the contract. 10. ——— Part acceptance of goods by defendant not according to contract—Rate payable for such goods. The defendants contracted to purchase from the plaintiffs "2,000 maunds of fresh, clean, and good up-country indigo seed, guaranteed growth of season 1870-71, at R11 per maund, to be delivered to the defendants' agent at Hajipore all in February next." In part performance of this contract, the plaintiffs delivered, and the defendants' agent at Hajipore accepted, 865 maunds of seed, no objection as to quality being then taken. But when the remainder of the seed was tendered in February, the defendants refused to accept it on the ground that it was not according to contract. At the same time and upon the same grounds, they refused to pay the contract price for the seed already accepted, and tendered instead the market price at the time of delivery. In an action to recover the contract price of the 865 maunds delivered, and damages for loss on re-sale of the remainder of the seed, the Judge of the Court below found on the facts that the seed was not "seed of the growth of 1870-71" as far as it was reasonably possible to procure it; and that, though there was evidence to show that seed of the previous season, if of good quality and in good preservation, was occasionally mixed with the new seed, and that seed so mixed had been accepted as a performance of contracts for 1870-71, yet there was no evidence that, under such contracts as the present, the seller was by custom at liberty to mix seeds of two crops so as to bring the sample up to an average quality, and, further, that a custom, so directly at variance with the express terms of the contract, could not, if proved, be allowed to prevail. Held, also, that the defendants had waived any objection to the 865 maunds which must therefore be taken as a good delivery protanto under the contract, and must be paid for accordingly. Held, on appeal (affirming the decision of the Court below), that the plaintiffs had not delivered seed according to the contract; but (reversing the decision of the Court below) that the contract was a contract for the delivery of the entire quantity of 2,000 maunds; and that the plaintiffs could only recover for the 865 maunds as on a new contract arising at the time when the seed was accepted; such contract being to pay for the seed according to its value, and not according to the rate stipulated for the 2,000 maunds. 11. ——— Endorsement by parties on original contract—Transfer of Contract—Action for non-acceptance. On the 16th April 1878 the plaintiffs contracted to purchase from F. M. & Co., of Bombay, at R18 per ton, "the entire cargo of coal per 'Culzean,' amounting to 900 tons or thereabouts." On 18th April the plaintiffs transferred the contract to the defendants and one Nanabhai Bomansha, and the following endorsement was made:—"The contract to be transferred to Messrs. Tullockchand and Shapurji and Nanabhai Bomansha at R20½. For C. H. B. Forbes and Selves, W. Tennent & Co." Underneath this endorsement the transferees wrote as follows:—"Accepted 450 tons at R20½ per ton. Nanabhai Bomansha. Accepted 450 tons at R20½ per ton. Tullockchand and Shapurji." The Culzean arrived at Bombay with a cargo of 2,167 tons of coal, on board of which it appeared that 1,300 tons had been shipped to the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company and 867 tons to the order of the shippers. F. M. & Co. were agents at Bombay for the shippers. The defendants refused to take delivery of the coal, on the ground that the contract transferred to them and Nanabhai Bomansha was a contract for an "entire cargo." The plaintiffs sued the defendants for non-acceptance, contending that there had been no transfer to defendants and Nanabhai Bomansha of the original contract, but a new several contract for separate portions of the cargo. Held, that the joint effect of the endorsement and the original contract was that the defendants agreed to purchase 450 tons, part of an entire cargo of 900 tons, or thereabouts; that, inasmuch as the cargo of the Culzean consisted of 2,167 tons, the defendants were not bound to accept any part of such cargo, and that the suit was not maintainable. Borrowman v. *Drayton, L. 12. ——— Dispute as to quality of goods tendered—Right to examine goods—Survey—Reasonable time for examination of goods by purchaser—Contract Act, IX of 1872, s. 38. The defendant agreed to purchase from the plaintiffs one hundred full-pressed bales "fully good fair Kishil cotton" at R208-8 per candy, to be delivered from March 15th to April 1st. On March 21st the plaintiffs sent the defendant a letter reminding him of the contract and requesting him to take delivery. On receipt of this letter, the defendant put the matter into the hands of V. The plaintiff had then no cotton of the specific kind to deliver, nor did the letter refer to any particular bales. At 11-30 o'clock A.M., on March 30th, the plaintiffs sent the defendant a letter enclosing a sampling order directed to an employé of Messrs. H and S, on whose premises the bales referred to in the order were lying. V, on behalf of the defendant, got samples taken of the cotton and examined them, but without reference on that day to any standard. He then, however, conceived doubts as to the quality of the cotton, and expressed his doubts to the plaintiff in the evening of that day. On 31st March the plaintiffs sent the defendant a delivery order enclosed in a letter from their solicitors calling on the defendant to attend with his surveyor at 1 P.M. on that day to survey the cotton, as otherwise an ex parte survey would be held. This letter reached the defendant at 11-30 o'clock A.M., and was given by him to V at noon of the same day. V applied to M

to attend as surveyor, but M was unable to do so. The plaintiffs had an ex parte survey held by Messrs. C. and B at 1 P.M., and they pronounced the cotton, samples of which were submitted to them, to be "fully good fair Kishli cotton." While this survey was going on, the defendant was on the Cotton Green, but declined to attend, saying that V and his surveyor were coming. Shortly afterwards V did come, and subsequently wrote a letter to plaintiffs in the defendant's name, stating that the cotton was not of the description contracted to be sold by them, and asking for a survey. This letter reached the plaintiffs at 2-19 o'clock P.M. After this there was a discussion between plaintiffs and defendant and V. On that afternoon (the 31st March) the plaintiffs' solicitors sent a letter to the defendant stating the result of the survey and requiring him to take delivery. This was answered by a letter of next day (April 1st) from the defendant's solicitors denying that the cotton was of proper quality or that proper notice of the survey had been given, alleging that the defendant had that morning attended with his surveyor and asked leave to survey the cotton which had been refused, and stating that the contract must be treated as cancelled. The cotton was sold by auction on April 5th. The plaintiffs brought this suit to recover R1,631-1-11 as damages for non-acceptance of the cotton. The defendant contended that there had been no reasonable time allowed by the plaintiffs for the examination of the cotton, and that a joint survey should have been held. Held, that a joint survey was not necessary under the terms of s. 38 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), and that the defendant, having had a period of twenty-four hours for inspection, had had a reasonable opportunity of seeing whether the cotton offered by the plaintiffs was such cotton as the plaintiffs were bound by their contract to deliver. A purchaser of goods is not entitled to continue inspecting and examining the goods offered by the vendor until the expiration of the period for delivery. A reasonable opportunity for such inspection and examination is all that he is entitled to. RUTTONSEY MORARJI v. JAMNADAS PITAMBERDAS

The sircar then went to the godown of the defendants, thoroughly examined the undelivered shellac, and removed it to the godown of the plaintiff. Held, that after this the parties could not be allowed to raise the question whether

14. ——— Alleged breach of warranty by vendor on a sale and delivery of goods—Burden of proof after acceptance, following upon an examination by purchaser. Under five contracts for the sale of good Burma cutch, to be delivered to a Calcutta firm, in Calcutta, by the vendors, who knew that it was bought for the export market, delivery and acceptance followed upon a searching examination of the cutch by the purchasers. The latter having sent advices of this purchase to a New York firm, with which they were in partnership, parcels of cutch were sold to different buyers in America, to whom, under such "forward" contracts, the cutch was shipped in separate shipments by the Calcutta firm. On the arrival of the cutch, objection was taken to its quality by the American buyers, who refused to take delivery. The Calcutta firm thereupon sued the vendors under the five contracts above mentioned. The burden of proof being upon the plaintiffs, who had accepted the cutch after full examination in Calcutta, to prove the breach of contract by the vendors by cogent evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption of due performance that arose from such acceptance:—Held, that this presumption was not rebutted in the absence of evidence as to the treatment of the cutch on its re-shipment by the plaintiffs, on the voyage from India to America, and at the port of arrival. wrote to S N & Co. enclosing a delivery order for the goods (which P & Co. stated they believed to be in godown), requesting that they might be marked in a particular way. On the 25th May S N & Co. wrote to P & Co. informing them that they held the goods at P & Co.'s disposal. On the 28th May P & Co. received this letter. On the 31st May P & Co. chartered a ship to take on board the said goods and other goods bought by P & Co. from S N & Co. and others, and wrote to S N & Co. informing them that the ship would arrive about the 12th June. On the 5th June P. & Co. wrote acknowledging receipt of a letter which stated that only a portion of the goods to be shipped was ready. On the 9th June P & Co. received a letter from S N & Co. stating that all the goods were ready. On the 17th June the ship arrived at Cocanada. On the 21st June S N & Co. stopped payment and ceased to carry on business. No goods were delivered according to the contract. S N & Co. never had the goods to deliver between 18th May and 17th June. In a suit by P & Co. to recover from W & Co. the price paid and damages for breach of contract to deliver the goods, it was contended for W & Co. (i) that the transfer of the delivery order of the 18th May amounted to a delivery of the goods. Held, that, as S N & Co. had neither had possession of the goods to be delivered nor had appropriated any goods to the contract, the delivery order was inoperative. (ii) That the acceptance of the delivery order by P & Co. amounted to an agreement that S N & Co. should deliver to P & Co. the goods when ready, and that the liability of S N & Co. was substituted for that of W & Co. Held, that such an agreement could not be inferred. (iii) That as S N & Co., by accepting the delivery order, were estopped from denying that they had possession of the goods as against P & Co., S N & Co. were discharged as against W & Co., and therefore P & Co had no remedy against W & Co. Held, (1) that S N & Co. were not discharged as against W & Co., as S N & Co.'s representations were false ; (2) that even if S N & Co. were discharged, this could not affect P & Co. (iv) That as P & Co. had not supplied a ship in May, they had failed to perform their part of the contract and could not recover. Held, distinguishing Bowes v. Shand, L. R. 2 App. Ca. 455, and Reuter v. Sala, L. R. 4 C. P. D. 239, that the presence of the ship in May was not a condition precedent to P & Co. recovering. (v) That W & Co. had rescinded the contract on the 29th June by refusing to deliver, and therefore P & Co. were only entitled to recover the price paid. Held, that W & Co. were not entitled to rescind the contract. Held, also, that P & Co., having paid in advance, were entitled to a reasonable time after the 29th June to prepare to purchase other goods, and were entitled to the difference between the contract price and the market price on the 1st of July as damages for the breach to deliver. 16. ——— Sale of unascertained goods—Appropriation by Vendor—Passing of property—Power of re-sale—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 107—Measure of Damages. The contract was for sale by description of 15 bales of grey shirtings (to arrive) at an agreed price. It was found that the 15 bales, which were tendered by the plaintiff, did answer the description, but the defendants refused to accept them, alleging that they were wrongly marked. Under the contract of sale, the plaintiffs had an express power of re-sale. After giving notice to the defendants, they had the goods re-sold at auction and bought them in themselves as the highest bidders. Then they brought an action for the difference between the contract price and the price realized at the re-sale, framing the suit as for loss on re-sale and not for damages for breach of the contract. Held, that, the defendants having refused to accept the goods, the property in them remained in the vendors (plaintiffs), and the re-sale had no effect whatever. To such a case as this neither s. 107 of the Contract Act nor the proviso for re-sale in the contract itself can have any application. Such power is required when the property in the goods has passed to the purchaser, subject to the lien of the vendor for the unpaid purchase-money. The plaintiffs were entitled to receive only the difference between the market price of the day and the contract price, and that was the true measure of damages. 17. ——— Passing of Property—Power of re-sale—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 107—Measure of damages. The plaintiff under several contracts with the defendant produced by manufacture goods answering to the description of the contracts, and appropriated them to the several contracts. On notice of the production of the goods being given to the defendant, he directed the goods so appropriated to be marked and despatched for shipment according to certain instructions. The plaintiffs carried out these instructions, but the goods could not be shipped, as the vessels in which they were to be shipped were not available at their usual place. Held, the ownership in the goods was transferred to the defendant, and the plaintiffs became entitled under s. 107 of the Contract Act, after due notice, to re-sell them on the defendant's refusal to take delivery and to recover as damages the difference between the contract prices of the goods and the price at which they were resold. tract Act (IX of 1872), s. 107—Liability for loss. Plaintiffs had procured certain goods in pursuance of indents signed by defendants, which provided that, in the event of defendants failing to take due delivery of the goods, plaintiffs should be at liberty to re-sell them on defendants' account, and that defendants should pay to plaintiffs any deficiency arising from such re-sale. Goods were re-sold at a loss, and in a suit to recover such loss it was contended, in defence, that the property in the goods had not passed to the defendants, and that plaintiffs' only remedy was by way of damages. Held, that a clause such as that contained in the indent came into operation notwithstanding that the property had not passed to the buyers; and that plaintiffs were entitled to recover the deficiency arising from the re-sale. 19. ——— Breach of contract—Power of re-sale—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 107—Damages. The plaintiffs sold to the defendant under an "Indent" contract ten cases of tobacco at an agreed price. On arrival, the defendant refused to pay for and take delivery of the goods on the ground that they were not the goods contracted for. After notice to the defendant, the plaintiffs re-sold the goods and sued to recover the expenses of the re-sale and the difference between the price realized and the contract price with interest. Held, that cl. 1 of the Indent contract gave the plaintiffs a right to re-sell the goods and sue for the damages mentioned therein. S. 107 of the Contract Act had no bearing on the case. Yule & Co. v. Mahommed Hossain, I. L. R. 24 Calc. 124, dissented from. MOLL SCHUTTE & CO. v. LUCHMI CHAND . . . I. L. R. 25 Calc. 505

20. ——— Carriers—Railway Receipt—Jus tertii—Title. In March 1871, T & Co., brokers in Calcutta, sold to S & Co., on account of C, an up-country seed merchant, 200 tons of poppy-seed, and allowed C to draw upon them to the extent of the value of fifty tons before despatch, on the terms of a previous contract, by which they had allowed C to draw against cotton to arrive in Calcutta before the drafts matured, C authorizing them to receive payment on his account on goods sold and delivered through them. Towards the end of March, C entered into an agreement with E, a merchant in Calcutta, under which E accepted bills to a large amount for C, upon C's promise to cover the bills before maturity. In June C ordered the defendant Railway Company to consign all goods despatched from Fyzabad to E's address, and empowered E to take delivery of, and give receipts for, all such goods. In the same month, C despatched from Patna, in bags supplied by S & Co., fifty-five tons of poppy-seed to Calcutta, and sent the railway receipt to E, who was therein named as the consignee. stated that goods would only be delivered to the consignee named in the receipt, or to his order. In advising E of the despatch of poppy-seed, C informed him that it had been sold to S & Co., and that delivery was to be made through T & Co.; and E had also seen letters which passed between C and his agents, in which the following passages occurred: "Our Calcutta firm will deliver the poppy to T & Co.," and "Do your best, and hurry off despatches of fifty tons of poppy; the rest of the poppy and linseed can go to E." E endorsed the railway's receipt to S & Co., who paid the freight, and sircars of E and S & Co. together went to the railway station and demanded delivery, which the Railway Company at first promised to give, but afterwards, under an order from C to "deliver fifty tons to T & Co., and to no other party, the rest of the seed to be delivered according to documents," they, at T & Co.'s request, delivered the whole fifty-five tons to them. In an action by E against the Railway Company for non-delivery of the seed to him:—Held (per MARKBY, J.) E was mere agent of the vendor for the delivery of the goods; T & Co. had superior title to the goods, of which E had notice. Held (per COUCH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J., on appeal) the Railway Company was bound to deliver to E. The property in the goods and the right of possession was in him; he had an authority coupled with an interest which C could not revoke; he had no notice of the title of T & Co., which was an equitable right only. 21. ———Betrothal—Marriage—Breach of promise of marriage—Reciprocal contingent contract — Damages — Upariyaman — Halai Bhatia caste. The plaintiffs alleged that by a written agreement dated the 18th March 1882 the first defendant and her deceased son L agreed that the second defendant K, who was the daughter of the first defendant, should be given in marriage to the second plaintiff, who was the son of plaintiff No. 1; and that the betrothal of these two persons took place accordingly. The agreement was executed by the said L, as eldest male member of his family, in the name of his deceased father. In pursuance of this agreement, the plaintiffs paid to the first defendant ₹700 as "upariyaman," and they presented K with ornaments and clothes of considerable value. The plaintiffs complained that the first defendant subsequently refused to carry out the contract of marriage and had married her daughter, K (defendant No. 2), to another person. They claimed in this suit to recover the ornaments and clothes, together with the ₹700 paid to the first defendant as "upariyaman" and ₹10,000 as damages. The first defendant was sued both in her personal capacity and as heir and legal representative of her son L. The first defendant pleaded that neither she nor the second defendant were bound by the betrothal agreement, as they were not parties to it; that the contract had been a contingent contract, inasmuch as her son, L, had agreed to give K (defendant No. 2) in marriage to the second plaintiff only on condition that he (L) should obtain in marriage U, the daughter of the third plaintiff, and that L and U were accordingly betrothed; that L had died in 1884, and that the contract had been thereby determined; that she had been willing to renew it, and had proposed that a younger son of hers (J) should be accepted as the husband of U, but that the plaintiffs had declined this offer. In proof of her allegation that the contract was a reciprocal contingent contract, the first defendant relied upon the following clause in the agreement:—"At the time when the marriages are to take place, the marriages of the two girls are to be performed together. When you shall give your daughter in marriage, I also am at the same time to give my daughter in marriage." Held, that the agreement of betrothal was not a reciprocal contingent contract; and that the first defendant had committed a breach of the agreement by not giving her daughter, K (defendant No. 2), in marriage to the second plaintiff; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the first defendant the value of the ornaments and the R700 paid by the plaintiffs as "upariyaman," together with R600 damages for the breach of contract. The agreement provided that defendants should pay to plaintiff at the rate of 90 per cent. upon the value of work executed and materials laid down as certified by the architect, and that, should defendants make default in so doing for a period beyond fourteen days after the amount thereof shall have been certified, plaintiff should be at liberty to suspend the works and require payment of all works executed and materials laid down. The agreement further provided that, if the contractor shall suspend or delay the performance of his part of the contract, the defendants might, through their architect, give notice requiring the works to be proceeded with, and in case of default on the part of the contractor for a period of twenty-eight days might enter upon and take possession of the premises. It was further provided that the decision of the architect with respect to the amount, state, and condition of the works actually executed or in respect to any questions that may arise shall be final. During the continuance of the works, disputes arose as to the amount due to the plaintiff, although certified by the architect as agreed, and in consequence plaintiff refused to continue the work, whereupon defendants, after giving due notice, entered upon the premises. Plaintiff sued for damages in consequence of the defendants having taken possession and for the balance due on the accounts. Held, (i) that the defendants committed a breach of the contract by refusing to pay the full amount due under the architect's certificate; (ii) that the plaintiff thereupon rescinded the contract, and that, therefore, defendants were entitled after due notice to enter and take possession; (iii) that in the absence of proof of collusion between the architect and the plaintiff, the defendants were bound by the architect's certificate as to the amount due to the plaintiff. The terms, "shipment at seller's option during August-September," in a contract, do not mean that the seller has an optional period of two separate months in which he can deliver, but they refer merely to the character of the delivery. Leigh v. Paterson, 8 Taunt. 540, referred to. If the right to reject the goods as being of an inferior quality is not exercised by the buyer when the goods are tendered, but a right of a proprietary character in respect of the goods is exercised by directing delivery to be made to third parties then the buyer accepts the goods, and, if they remain in the possession of the seller, then the latter has a lien upon them, and is entitled, under s. 107 of the Contract Act, to re-sell the goods and recover as damages the difference between the contract price and the price at the re-sale. 9. BREACH OF CONTRACT—contd.

One of two defendants in consideration of advances made to him by the plaintiff for the purpose of paying the cost of obtaining the lease of a forest in the name of his son, the other defendant, made an agreement with the plaintiff that "when my son returns I will make him to arrange for you in some way or other (or by any means) to go on working the forest within the years for which a written permit has been obtained." The son was not a party to the agreement. Held, in a suit for damages for breach of contract in not giving the working of the forest to the plaintiffs, that on its true construction the agreement contemplated the making of a contract for working the forest only on the return of the son and left all terms to be then arranged; and the plaintiff was entitled only to recovery of the advances with interest. An alleged contemporaneous verbal arrangement as to the rates the plaintiff was to pay for working the forest was held not to be proved; and, quære, whether, if proved, evidence of it would have been admissible with reference to s. 91 of the Evidence Act. The plaintiff after a time refused, for reasons stated by her in her plaint, to live with her husband. Subsequently to this the stipulated allowance having been stopped, the plaintiff sued on the agreement above referred to to recover arrears amounting to R15,000. Held, that the plaintiff, though not a party to the agreement in question, was entitled to sue on it; also, on a construction of the agreement that no conditions as to the conduct of the plaintiff being laid down therein the fact that the plaintiff refused to live with her husband was no bar to the suit. Prior to lodging the complaint, the employer had completed the work, and he claimed an order for the repayment of the advance:—Held, that no order could be made. The section only applies, when the work is uncompleted, when the complaint is made. If the work has been completed, when the complaint is made, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction under the section though the employer has a remedy against the workman in the Civil Courts. High Court Proceedings, dated 29th March 1865 (Weir's 'Law of Offences,' 445), approved. On a suit, instituted by B & Co., for an injunction to restrain M from serving, working or being employed by any other person or persons and for damages :—Held, although there was no negative condition in terms in the agreement, a negative covenant could be properly implied, under s. 57 of the Specific Relief Act, and illustration (d) thereto, which gave legislative sanction in India to the law as laid down by Selborne L. At the time when the child was handed over to the widow, her husband's corpse was still in the house, and the relatives of the child and other members of the caste obstructed the removal of the corpse until the child had been accepted in adoption, and until the widow had executed a deed of adoption. Held, that obstructing the removal of the corpse by deceased's widow or her guardian unless she made an adoption and signed a document was an unlawful act, and amounted to "coercion" and "undue influence," such as are defined in s. 15 or 16 of the Contract Act. 1. ——— Fraud—Amending Act VI of 1889—Voidable contract—Defendant entitled to plead fraud—Lapse of time—Undue influence. Fraud does not make a transaction void, but only voidable at the instance of the person defrauded. The plaintiff sued in 1900 to recover from the defendant the amount due for interest on a mortgage-bond dated the 15th April 1893 by sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant contended that he did not execute the bond with free consent, and that it was obtained from him under pressure of criminal proceedings. Held, that the defendant was entitled to resist the claim made against him by pleading fraud, and that he was entitled to urge that plea, though he had not brought a suit to set aside the transaction. Held, further, that under the circumstances he was not precluded from urging that plea by lapse of time. Jugaldas v. *Ambashankar, I. 2. ——— Mortgage—Each case to be decided by its own circumstances. Held, that the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience do not of necessity disentitle a mortgagee from insisting on his security for a greater sum than what has been actually advanced: in each case the question must be asked whether there has or has not been a hard and unfair bargain on the borrower, but when that is not established against the mortgagee, then the right to redeem still remains, though it is redeeming not on payment of the sum advanced, but of the sum, which the parties agreed it was worth the mortgagor's while to pay in order to get a smaller advance, when he was in want of money. Each case must be determined according to its own circumstances. HARI v. RAMJI (1904) . I. L. R. 28 Bom. 371

3. ——— Undue influence—Urgent need of money—Loan borrowed by a person in urgent need of money—Promise to pay a time-barred debt—Unfair and unconscionable bargains—Fraud—Coercion—Equity. The defendant, a karkun in the Government service, being heavily indebted and being very much harassed by his creditors, applied to the plaintiff for a loan on a mortgage. The plaintiff agreed to lend provided the defendant executed a khata for the payment of R307-4-0, originally due by the latter's father, but which in 1894 had been held to be time-barred in a suit brought by the plaintiff, and also for the payment of R25, the costs of that suit. The defendant, accordingly on the 16th

September 1895, passed a khata for R332-4-0, for the amount due under which the defendant finally passed a promissory note for R600 on the 27th August 1901. Upon this promissory note the present suit was brought. The Subordinate Judge held that the defendant received from the plaintiff only R28 on the 16th September 1895, of which R10 had been repaid; and passed a decree for R36 (viz., R18, the amount of principal and R18 as interest). On appeal, the District Judge varied the decree by allowing the plaintiff's claim to the further extent of R307-4-0; and disallowed the rest of the claim on the ground that it was vitiated by undue influence which the plaintiff exercised over the defendant. On appeal: Held, that the plaintiff's claim ought to be allowed in full. If, according to law, a promise to pay a debt barred under the Statute of Limitations is valid and is supported on the principle that in so promising the debtor is doing what every honest man, morally speaking, ought to do and would do, the same principle ought equally to apply to a further promise to pay the said debt with interest, because interest is only accessory to the principal, and is paid to the creditor, because the latter has been deprived of the use of his money and the debtor has had the benefit of it. Under s. 16, cl. 1 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), when two persons enter into a contract, first, there must be subsisting between them some relation of the kind described in the section, and secondly, the dominating position arising out of that relation must have been used by the party holding that position to secure an unfair advantage over the other party. When a man, who is in urgent need of money on account of his poverty and pecuniary difficulties, asks for a loan from another, that other is in one sense in a position to dominate the will of the former by proposing his own terms and getting the borrower to agree to them. The borrower's necessity is in such cases the measure of the terms agreed to. That is a feature of every contract of money-lending, where the borrower is a man without credit and the lender is exposing his money to considerable risk. But that is not the vague kind of relation and domination contemplated by the plain terms of cl. 1 of s. 16 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). There are well-known relations such as those of guardian and ward, father and son, patient and medical adviser, solicitor and client, trustee and cestui que trust and the like, which plainly fall within cl. 1 of the section. Where no such specific relations exist and the parties are at arm's length, being strangers, undue influence may be exerted, but its existence must be proved by evidence; and in such cases the nature of the benefit or the age, capacity, or health of the party, on whom the undue influence is alleged to have been exerted, are of great importance. In short, the test is, confidence reposed by one party and betrayed by the other, which means that there must be an element of fraud or coercion, under either of which the acts constituting undue influence must range themselves. The expression "unfair advantage" in cl. 1 of s. 16 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) is used as meaning an advantage obtained by unrighteous means. A Court of Equity will not set aside a contract, merely because it flows from moral, not legal, obligations, unless it was proved that the defendant was forced, tricked or misled into it by the plaintiff by means of fraud, using that word not merely in the restricted sense of actual deceit, but in the larger sense of an unconscientious use of power arising out of certain circumstances and conditions, and showing that the defendant, having been victimised by the plaintiff's unfair and improper conduct, was unable to understand what he was doing. 4. ——— As amended by Act No. VIII of 1899—Suit on bond—Unconscionable transaction—Debtor and creditor—Disqualified proprietor whose estate was under control of Court of Wards—Exercise by creditor of undue influence—Compound interest—Onus of proof of undue influence. This was an appeal by the defendant, a "disqualified proprietor" under the provisions of the Oudh Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1876) whose property, on the ground of his indebtedness and consequent inability to manage it, had been placed in charge of the Court of Wards. Whilst it was under their control and without their sanction he executed on 27th January 1896, in favour of the plaintiff, a bond by which he contracted to pay in two years with interest and compound interest with yearly rests, the sum of R9,950 which was due on a former bond, dated 14th September 1889, executed by him for a loan of R4,000 in favour of the same creditor. No actual money consideration, therefore, passed at the execution of the bond in suit. The defendant's estates were restored to him in July 1898, and on 25th January 1904 the plaintiff brought a suit for R32,877 principal and interest due on the bond. The defence was that the bond was obtained by "undue influence," and that it was an unconscionable transaction. Both the courts below placed the onus on the defendant to prove undue influence, and found that he had failed to do so and that the transaction was not unconscionable. Held by the Judicial Committee (reversing the decisions of the Courts in India) following the case of Dhanipal Das v. Maneshar Bakhsh Singh, I. L. R. 28 All. 570; L. R. 33 I. A. 113, in which the same defendant as in the present case was the borrower that he was (as in that case) placed in such a condition of helplessness that the plaintiff was in a position "to dominate his will" within the meaning of s. 16 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) as amended by Act VIII of 1899, and that he used that position to obtain an unfair advantage over the defendant. Under the circumstances the bond was set aside, and a decree passed for the original sum of R4,000 with simple interest at 18 per cent. per annum from 14th September 1889 to the date of payment. 1. ——— Undue Influence—Money-lender—Exorbitant rate of interest—Undefended suit—Court's right to interfere—Reasonable rate of interest, what is—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 210—Power of High Court to make its money decrees payable by instalments. Under ss. 16 and 19A of the Indian Contract Act the Court has power to interfere and relieve a defendant against what may appear to the Court to be unconscionable transactions. The circumstances in each case must be looked to in order to decide what would be a reasonable rate of interest to allow. Under s. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code this Court has the power to make its money decrees payable by instalments. Per CURIAM: The general impression prevailing in the minds of money-lenders in Bombay, as echoed in the plaintiff's affidavit, that in all cases they can defeat the provisions of the Code as to payment by instalments and get a decree for immediate payment by avoiding the Small Causes Court and coming to this Court, is erroneous and needs to be corrected. 2. ——— Unconscionable bargain—Parties not on an equal footing—Defendant not aware of the nature of the transaction—Undue influence—Contract voidable. To render a contract voidable on the ground of undue influence there must be evidence of undue influence as required by s. 16 of the Contract Act. A high rate of interest, which would induce a Court of Equity to give relief against a bargain as being on that account hard and unconscionable, is not by itself sufficient evidence of undue influence. There must be additional circumstances and when there is evidence of such additional circumstances they should be considered in the light of justice and equity. When the parties to the transaction are not on an equal footing, when it appears that the borrower was not aware of the real nature of the bargain, so that he put his signature to a document, which in fact imposed very different terms to those appearing on the face of it, when the actual rate of interest is many times higher than what appears on the document, when the borrower, when pressed for payment for what appears due on such a document, has to renew, on still more exorbitant terms, all these are additional circumstances sufficient to make out a primâ facie case of undue influence so as to throw the onus on the lenders to disprove it. R. 33 I. A. 118*, distinguished. In default of payment of interest, both bonds stipulated that additional interest should be paid by the mortgagor from the date of their execution, both by increase of the general rate and by the increased rate of the compound interest; but at the date of the execution of the second bond there was a settlement of accounts as regards the interest due on the first bond and simple interest only was charged, the amount being included in the principal of the second bond: Held, that the stipulation for increased interest being retrospective and not merely from the date of default was a penalty within the meaning of s. 74 of the Contract Act as amended by Act VI of 1889, s. 4; but that under the Act reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount of the penalty was payable by the mortgagor. Their Lordships approved the concurrent findings of both Courts that the compensation should be at the same rate as the increased interest stipulated for; and also the direction of the High Court that in the case of the first bond and in the case of the second bond it should run from the date of default of that bond, compound interest being allowed only at the rate at which simple interest was stipulated for. Held, also, that on the true construction of ss. 86, 88 of the Transfer of Property Act and the Rules of Court made under s. 104, the High Court was right in allowing 6 per cent. interest only and not the mortgage rate of interest on the aggregate amount found due from the date fixed for redemption until realization. 1. ——— ss. 20, 21—Mistake of Facts—Erroneous expectation. The defendant executed to the plaintiff in 1847 a mulgeni kabuliat (corresponding to a lease at a fixed rental), agreeing to pay to the plaintiff R150 annually. At the date of the execution of the mulgeni the Government assessment was R56-8-0, but in 1872 it was enhanced to R129-8-0, and a local fund cess of R4-9-0 imposed in addition. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover from him the enhanced assessment and the cess. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, inasmuch as the defendant's liability was fixed by the terms of the mulgeni, which was binding, although it had been executed by both parties in the belief that the Government assessment would not be increased. 1. ——— Advance on Risk (yogyam) of Ship—Marine Insurance—Contract by way of Wager. In a document, dated 3rd August 1896, signed by defendants and addressed to plaintiff, it was recited that plaintiff had lent a sum of money to defendants on the risk or security ("yogyam") of a ship belonging to defendants "now under sail to the Nicobars" from Negapatam; and the defendants stipulated that "as soon as the said ship starts for and reaches the Nicobar Isles and thence sets sail and goes to Rangoon, Moulmein, and from there starts again and reaches Negapatam. . . . , that is, as soon as the said ship shall come back to the Negapatam harbour again, we shall repay to you on the expiry of eight months from 23rd July 1896," the sum advanced, with interest. The ship had left Negapatam on 23rd July 1896, and was lost at sea three days later. Plaintiff sued defendants for the sum advanced, on the ground, among others, that, as the vessel had been lost before the date of the agreement, the latter was void, and defendants were liable to refund the amount advanced. Held, that he was not entitled to recover. The risk which formed the basis of the agreement, according to its true construction, commenced from the 23rd July 1896, as set out in the document, because it was on that day that the vessel sailed from port and commenced to incur the perils of the deep. The agreement was consequently not void under s. 20 of the Contract Act, nor were the defendants bound, under s. 65 of that Act, to restore to plaintiff the sum they had received under its terms. Such an agreement could not be held to be in any sense a policy of marine insurance. Per DAVIES, J.—The suit should be dismissed, under s. 30 of the Contract Act, on the further ground that the agreement was one by way of wager. But before the marriage could take place the plaintiff's son died of plague. Under the agreement, however, the plaintiff had before her son's death paid to the defendant the sum of R750. Subsequently the plaintiff having brought a suit to recover that sum, the defendant contended that the agreement being by way of marriage brokerage was void as opposed to public policy and, therefore, under s. 65 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) no sum paid under it could be recovered. Held, that having regard to the character of the agreement between the parties the plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum from the defendant. S. 65 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) provides for the restitution of any advantage received under a contract or agreement. The section preserves the distinction between agreement and contract which is maintained throughout the Act. The section speaks generally of an agreement discovered to be void without any express reference to the cause or origin of the void character, so that an agreement which is void by reason of a principle of law would not on that account fall outside the scope of the section. In 1848, B and R mortgaged a piece of land to V. It was to be redeemed in eight years, or else to become the absolute property of the mortgagee. It was not redeemed; and in 1859, B, in whose name the land was entered in the Government records, executed a razinama in favour of V, and V passed a kabuliat accepting the land. B and R then became V's tenants, and were as such successfully sued by him for rent in 1863. In 1872, V sold the land to N, who again sold it to the defendant. The plaintiff, as purchaser from the original mortgagors (B and R) of their alleged equity of redemption, filed the present suit to redeem the property. Held, that, as the razinama given by B contained no reservation, and as it was accompanied by a transfer of possession, it had the effect of a conveyance of all the mortgagor's rights to the mortgagee. It operated to extinguish the equity of redemption, notwithstanding any misconception or ignorance on B's part of his rights as mortgagor. VISHNU SAKHARAM PHATAK v. KASHINATH BAPU SHANKAR . . I. By s. 42 of the Excise Act (XXII of 1881) the violation of any condition of a license granted under the Act is made a punishable offence. The plaintiff sub-let the license to defendants, who on the 5th of September 1884 executed an agreement to pay to the plaintiff a certain sum of money, in which was included the sum of R1,500 which the defendants had undertaken to pay to plaintiff as rent reserved on the sub-lease. The plaintiff instituted a suit for recovery of the amount due to him on the agreement, and it was decreed by the Court of first instance, but dismissed by the lower Appellate Court. On second appeal the plaintiff contended on the authority of Gauri Shankar v. Mumtaz Ali Khan, *I. L. After the expiration of the year, the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant to recover the balance due to him under the agreement, and obtained a decree. Held, reversing the decree, that the agreement not being permitted by the rules framed under the Opium Act (I of 1878) was forbidden by s. 4 of the Act, and was void as having in view an object forbidden by law. Held, further, that the plaintiff could not recover the price of the opium supplied to the defendant, inasmuch as advances made for an illegal purpose, subsequently carried out, cannot be recovered. 22. ——— Condition against sub-contract—Sub-contract made notwithstanding condition—Suit by sub-contractor—Illegality of sub-contract—Damages—Compensation for work done. Defendant contracted with the Executive Engineer of the Public Works Department to supply materials for the construction of a public road. One of the conditions of the contract was that no work was to be underlet, or let by task work, by the contractor without the express permission, in writing, of the Executive Engineer or his duly authorized agent. Subsequently the defendant, without obtaining the requisite permission, entered into an oral agreement with the plaintiff, under which the plaintiff was to do the contract work and the defendant to pay him all moneys received from the Executive Engineer under the contract, after deducting ten per cent., as the defendant's profit. It did not appear that the plaintiff knew of the condition against underletting contained in the contract. The plaintiff sued the defendant for the balance of money due to him under the oral agreement. The first Court found that the plaintiff had executed the whole of the contract work: and that the defendant had received from the Executive Engineer a total sum of R2,766-11-11, and of this had paid to the plaintiff R2,334-13-6, leaving a sum of R431-14-5 still in his hands. It ordered the defendant to pay this sum to the plaintiff less 10 per cent. of the whole sum of R2,766-11-11, and passed a decree accordingly for R155-3-8. On appeal, the Judge varied the decree by awarding to the plaintiff the whole sum of R431-14-5. He found that it had been agreed that the defendant should retain 10 per cent., but held that the agreement to assign or sublet the contract was contrary to public policy, and bad under s. 23 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). On appeal to the High Court. Held (reversing the decree of the Judge and restoring that of the first Court), that as it did not appear that the plaintiff knew of the condition in the contract, and as the objection of illegality was not taken by the defendant, the plaintiff was not precluded from enforcing against the defendant his own contract. Even if, however, the plaintiff could not enforce the contract, he would, under the circumstances, be entitled to receive from the defendant compensation for the work and labour of which the defendant had received the benefit. The only question was how the work done should be valued. There was no direct test of its market value. The best available test was the amount which the plaintiff, at the time when he entered into the agreement, accepted as sufficient, namely, the amount to be paid by the Executive Engineer less 10 per cent. The High Court, therefore, restored the decree of the Subordinate Judge. GANGADHAR RAGHUNATH JOSHI v. DAMODAR MOHANLAL I. L. R. 21 Bom. 522

All that the law provides is that compound interest will not be decreed by any Court. Referring to the Sonthal Regulations, s. 6 of Regulation III of 1872, and s. 24 of Regulation V of 1893, it was held in respect of an agreement to pay interest on an amount composed partly of the principal and interest due on a former debt that such agreement is not void under s. 24 of the Contract Act, and that the obligor may recover such sums of money as he is entitled in law to recover, notwithstanding that part of the consideration is compound interest. Eventually, the defendant failing to pay, the plaintiff accepted a bond executed jointly by the defendant and T, his father, by which they both became liable for the amount of the decree with interest at 18¾ per cent. In a suit on the bond, it was contended that it was void within the meaning of s. 23 of the Contract Act as being forbidden by, or of a nature to defeat the provisions of s. 257A of the Civil Procedure Code; and that, consequently, the suit on it was not maintainable. Held, the bond was not void under s. 23 of the Contract Act. Semble: The words "any law" in that section refer to some substantive law, and not to an adjective law such as the procedure Code is. The bonds stated that the object of the loan was to enable the mortgagor to get his daughters taught singing and for household expenses. In a suit brought by the plaintiff upon the bonds it was contended that they were void on the ground that the loan was for an immoral purpose. The District Judge was of opinion that the object of teaching the girls to sing was to make them more attractive as prostitutes, and therefore, to further an immoral purpose, which could not be separated from the legal part of the purpose for which the loan was contracted. He accordingly held that the bonds were void, and could not be enforced. On appeal: Held, that the bonds were not void, inasmuch as, amongst the community of naikins, singing was not necessarily acquired by the women with a view of practising prostitution. It was distinct mode of obtaining a livelihood not necessarily connected with prostitution although it might be true, as a fact, that most of those who sing lead a loose life. The District Judge, therefore, went too far in concluding that the singing was necessarily intended, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, to increase the attractiveness of the mortgagor's daughters as prostitutes. 41. ——— Agreement in consideration of staying criminal proceedings. Plaintiff sued to recover from defendants, his brothers, R25,000, with interest, on a deed of assignment "B" granted to him by one R G, dated 30th October 1870, transferring to plaintiff a promissory note "A" for R25,000, executed by first and second defendants to the aforesaid R G, as one of the mediators, in conjunction with one S G, in a division of family property between plaintiff and defendants and others, agreeing to pay over on demand by the 30th September 1870 to plaintiff, through the mediators aforesaid, R25,000 in lieu and on account of family property in possession of defendants. The defendants admitted the execution by them of the document for R25,000, to be paid by them to plaintiff (A), and pleaded that it was given on consideration of the withdrawal of a criminal prosecution, or if not, that there was no consideration at all; and that, at the time of its execution by them, there was no dispute or question between them and plaintiff as to a partition of family property, which had been definitely settled by the Civil Court at Salem in Original Suit No. 2 of 1868, under the decree in which the defendants had recovered R13,000 and odd from the plaintiff. They denied any division of family property by mediation, as also that they agreed to pay R25,000 on account of family property in their possession, also the validity of A, and that it was legally binding upon them. The Court of first instance found (i) that a partition of family property was effected by mediation, and the document A was executed to the mediators by defendants on account of family property in defendant's possession; (ii) that A was valid in law and binding on defendants; and gave judgment for plaintiff for the amount sued for. Upon appeal by the first defendant: Held, by the High Court, that, as the decree in original suit No. 2 of 1868 (finally disposed of in appeal by the High Court) settled all the rights of the parties, and, among other matters, the question of this alleged concealment, or theft, which the Court found the present plaintiff to have falsely asserted, there was here, therefore, no res dubia or lis incerta, nor could either party believe that there was such. The final judgment of a competent Court in a suit to which the plaintiff was a party had determined the matter. That, on the facts of the case, it seemed impossible to doubt that the note was executed as a consideration for getting rid of the criminal proceedings, and that, as such a consideration is not only null, but vicious, the decree of the Civil Judge should be reversed. 42. Contract relating to social and religious customs—Public policy. A Court cannot take notice of an agreement (e.g., in the way of awarding damages for breach thereof) which has reference to social and religious customs, and which cannot be enforced by a Civil Court. 43. Transaction defeating Government right of escheat—Contract Act, s. 65—Specific Relief Act, s. 35. Where the plaintiff and her mother executed in favour of the defendant a document which purported to divest the plaintiff and her mother of the entire property of the illom of which they were the sole proprietors, and to vest it in the defendant in consideration of his promising to marry and raise up heirs to the illom, and to maintain the plaintiff and her mother till death: Held, by INNES, J., that the document aimed at defeating the right of escheat of the Government, and the transaction was against public policy with reference to the decision in Cavali Vencata Narainappa's Case, 8 Moo. I. A. 500, but that the plaintiff, being in pari delicto with the defendant, could not recover the property. Held, by KINDERSLEY, J., that, as no claim was made by the Crown, it was not necessary to decide as to rights which may or may not be claimed by the Crown, and that, if plaintiff and her mother were not, as apparently they were not, in the position of ordinary Hindu widows, there was nothing opposed to public policy, in their disposing of the property, as being the last owners and competent to dispose of it absolutely. 50. ———— Agreement to procure Marriage in consideration of a money payment—Marriage Brokage—Illegal agreement—Public policy. The defendant was the eldest of three brothers whose mother on her marriage had been put out of the Lovana caste for having married a man belonging to a different caste. The defendant was anxious that he and his brothers should be readmitted to the caste; and in 1864 he entered into an agreement with the plaintiff, who was at that time one of the setias of the caste, whereby the latter agreed to procure the admission of the plaintiff and his brothers and get them married to girls belonging to the caste. In consideration for these services, the defendant was to pay the plaintiff the sum of R5,000, which sum was to become due on the marriage of the defendant's youngest brother to a girl of the caste, and to be expended in purchasing caste utensils, which were to be kept for the use of the caste. The plaintiff alleged that part of this money had been already paid to him, and that on the marriage of the defendant's youngest brother in 1880, he had demanded payment of the balance (viz., R3,149), which the defendant had not paid. He now sued to recover this balance. Held, that the contract sued on, in so far as it promised a money payment for the negotiations of a marriage by a third party, was immoral and contrary to public policy. Although a marriage when performed in the Asura form is valid, an agreement to pay money to the father in consideration of such marriage is not valid and the money cannot be recovered by suit. The suit was brought, and was conducted by the plaintiff and the defendant jointly, and was decreed by the High Court on appeal, and the defendant obtained possession of half the property. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the half on the ground that the agreement was illegal and void. It appeared that the amount actually spent by the defendant in the former litigation was R368, and that, if that suit had failed, he would have lost about R600. It was found that the value of the half share of the property was about R1,000. Held, that the agreement was unfair, unreasonable, extortionate, and contrary to public policy within the meaning of s. 23 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of the land in suit on payment of compensation for the advances made by the defendant in the former litigation, with interest at 12 per cent. per annum. Chunni Kuar v. *Rup Singh, I. The property had previously belonged to the father, since deceased, of the first defendant's wife and her sister, defendant No. 2. Shortly after the father's death, a suit for maintenance was brought by his sister-in-law against his widow and two daughters, in which the then defendants alleged that the property now in question had been given by him to the wife of the plaintiff's vendor, and the Court recorded a finding that the gift was valid. Held, that the plaintiff's purchase, which was found by the District Judge to be, though not a champertous transaction, one of a very speculative character, was not void as being contrary to public policy. Gopal Ramchandra v. *Gangaram Anandishet, I. One of the clauses of the lease provided that for a breach of any of the conditions of the lease, the Collector might impose a fine of rupees two hundred. The plaintiff sublet the toll to the defendants without the permission of the Collector and sued to recover a certain amount which the defendants promised to pay for the sub-lease. The defendants contended that the contravention of the condition of the lease, was illegal and opposed to public policy; that, therefore, the contract was void under s. 23 of the Contract Act, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the amount. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The agreement to sublet was not illegal or opposed to public policy, merely because it was forbidden under a pecuniary penalty by conditions in the lease to the plaintiff. 64. ——— Agreement in restraint of trade—Continuous cause of action—Damages—Transfer of business to a limited Company—Effect. In March 1902, certain Ice Manufacturing Companies in Bombay entered into an agreement relating to the manufacture and sale by them of ice. The agreement fixed, inter aliâ, the minimum price at which ice was to be sold by the parties, the proportion of the manufacture which each was to bear, and the proportion of the profits which each was to receive. It further created a monthly obligation to pay into, and a corresponding right to receive from, a general common fund, the difference, if any, between the profits actually received by the parties and those to which they were, under the agreement, entitled. On a suit being instituted for breach of the agreement, in which damages, sustained prior to and pending the hearing of the suit, were claimed ; Held, the fact that an agreement, if carried out, would limit competition and keep up prices, did not necessarily bring it within the terms of s. 27 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) ; to succeed in the defence under that section it was necessary to establish that the agreement was one whereby a person was restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade, or business of any kind. Held, further, that whether or not a High Court in India could award damages, in respect of a continuing cause of action, up to the date of its decree, subsequent successive accruals of an obligation to contribute to a fund could not be treated as falling within that description, and could not be awarded in a suit, where they had accrued due, subsequently to its institution. The power conferred by s. 191, cl. 2 of Madras District Municipalities Act (IV of 1884) on the Chairman of a Municipality to license places for selling meat, etc., only empowers him to consider the propriety of granting or withholding licenses in each case and not to enter into agreements, which must preclude him from considering any such application except from a particular person or persons. 71. ——— Compounding charge of fraudulent Abstraction of Documents—English Common Law rule. The plaintiff, a resident of Pondicherry, held a bond from one of the defendants (the second) for a certain sum of money. This bond the plaintiff charged the said defendant before the French legal authorities with having fraudulently abstracted from his house in Pondicherry, and he obtained the arrest and extradition from the British territory of the second defendant, as also of his brother, the first defendant. The latter on his way to Pondicherry met the plaintiff, and a settlement of accounts took place. The fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth defendants made themselves liable by executing the bond sued on for the sum found due to the plaintiff, and took indemnity bonds to themselves from the first defendant, the consideration being the agreement of the plaintiff to discontinue further proceedings in the criminal charge. The Court at Pondicherry sanctioned the agreement as a compromise by civil redress, and suspended further proceedings in accordance with the law in force in the Settlement. Held, that the contract was enforceable, the facts of the case not showing the compromise to be in its nature prejudicial as being in contravention of public policy under the Government of British India, or injurious to the good order and interests of society in regard to the administration of public justice. The English Common Law rule, that contracts for the compounding or suppression of criminal charges for offences of a public nature are illegal and void has no application to a contract for compounding the prosecution of criminal proceedings for an offence against the municipal law of a foreign country. The rule of international law, that the law of the place of a contract governs its validity, is subject to the qualification that every State may refuse to enforce a contract when it is for the fraudulent evasion of its law, or is injurious to its public institutions or interests. The lower Appellate Court held that the defence was bad on the ground that there was no evidence to show that the plaintiff was a party to, or in any way concerned in, the unlawful agreement, and gave the plaintiff a decree. Held, that the decree was correct, as there was no evidence to show either that the plaintiff knew of the agreement to suppress the criminal prosecution or that any money had been paid in pursuance of such unlawful agreement. set aside—Raising new points in second appeal. In 1898 the plaintiff, who was then young and inexperienced, assigned to the defendant, a dancing girl, a mortgage for R1,500, the consideration stated in the deed being payments in cash and jewels to the plaintiff and the discharge by the defendant of debts due by the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued in 1901 to set aside the assignment on the ground that no consideration passed as recited therein, but that the real consideration was the future continuance of immoral relations between himself and the sister of the defendant. The defendant contended that the consideration stated in the deed actually passed, and further that the plaintiff, who admitted that the assignment was for an immoral consideration, could not sue to set it aside. Both the lower Courts found that there was no consideration for the deed and set it aside. On second appeal to the High Court, it was contended that the transaction being for an immoral consideration and completely executed, the plaintiff as a person in pari delicto could not sue to set it aside. Held, that, where the transaction amounted to a voluntary gift, it cannot be set aside; but, where the transaction, though completed, was intended to be for consideration, it can be impeached, if the consideration is immoral, and it makes no difference whether the transaction is executed or executory. Ayerst v. *Jenkins, L. To indemnify the pleader against any loss which he might suffer under the bail bond, a nominal sale-deed and a nominal rent-note were passed by the defendant to the plaintiff. The plaintiff having subsequently brought a suit to recover two years' rent with interest on the strength of the rent-note, the defendant met the claim by a denial that the property belonged to the plaintiff. Held, dismissing the suit, that the consideration for the sale-deed was opposed to public policy. The sale-deed was therefore void under s. 24 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). Herman v. Jeuchner, L. R. 15 Q. B. D. 561, referred to. Held, further, that as the sale-deed and rent-note, which latter was merely intended to secure interest on the principal sum, were part and parcel of one single transaction, the rent-note was tainted with the same illegality, which affected the sale-deed and was therefore also void. Part of a single consideration for one object being unlawful, the whole agreement is void under s. 24 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). LAXMANLAL v. MULSHANKAR (1908) . . . I. L. 5. ——— Post-nuptial contracts—Consideration—Contract partly legal and partly illegal. The defendant, a Mahomedan husband, executed a kabinnama in favour of his wife, by which he agreed, among other things, that he would maintain her and make over to her whatever money he should earn ; that he would never exercise any violence upon her ; that he would not take her away from home ; that it should not be within his power to marry or make any nika without her permission ; that he would do nothing without her permission, and, if he did, she should be at liberty to divorce him, and realize from him the amount of dinmohur forthwith, and the nika would then be null and void. The plaintiff sued her husband upon this document, which was registered, to recover from him all his earnings amounting to R565, after deducting R54, which she admitted having received from him. The lower Appellate Court held, reversing the decision of the Munsif, that the agreement had been made subsequently to the marriage, and was, though registered, void for want of consideration. Held, on appeal, that the agreement, being registered, came within s. 25 of the Contract Act, and was not void on the ground that there was no consideration. Although some parts of the agreement might be illegal as being contrary to public policy, and therefore void, yet those which were legal could be enforced. See Davlat Singh v. *Pandu, I. L. The terms of the arrangement were embodied in a petition and sanctioned by the Court, which thereupon struck off the case. The debtors having made default on the 13th September 1881, the decree-holders applied for execution, but K, who had not agreed to the arrangement, objected that the application was barred under s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the objection was held to be valid. The decree-holders then sued to recover the money for which execution had been taken out, basing their suit upon the arrangement made by the defendants on the 10th February 1881. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed on proof that there was a contract between the parties on good consideration, and that the petition of 10th February 1881, though not a contract giving the plaintiffs a right of suit, might be regarded as evidence corroborating other evidence of such a contract. 12. ——— Judgment Debt.—Promise to pay a debt barred by limitation. The holder of a decree for money, dated the 22nd June 1868, applied for execution on the 23rd February 1869. In September 1869, before the decree had been executed, the judgment-debtor, admitting that a certain amount was due under the decree, agreed to pay such amount by instalments; and that, if default were made, the decree should be executed for the whole amount thereof. Default having been made early in 1873, the decree-holder applied at once for execution of the decree. On the 5th May 1873, a petition, signed by the judgment-debtor, was preferred on his behalf to the Court executing the decree, such petition being in effect as follows: "Execution case for R6,839-15-3. In this case the decree-holder has filed an application for execution of his decree in consequence of a default in payment of instalments: the fact is that the petitioner has failed to pay the instalments simply owing to illness, otherwise he has no objection to the decree-holder's demand: in future he will not fail to pay instalments: he has written a letter to plaintiff asking him to pardon his breach of promise, and to agree to realize the decree-money by the instalments formerly fixed, and to stay execution of the decree for the present. The decree-holder has granted this request: the petitioner therefore presents this petition and prays that monthly instalments of R150 may be fixed, and execution of the decree be postponed for the present: in case of default being made in payment of two instalments in succession, the decree-holder will be at liberty to realize the balance of the decree-money with interest at twelve per cent. per annum." At the time such petition was preferred, execution of the decree was barred by limitation. Held, that a "debt" within the meaning of s. 25 (3) of Act IX of 1872 includes a "judgment-debt," and such petition was a promise to pay a debt barred by limitation within the meaning of that law, and a suit founded on such petition to recover the balance of the money due under the decree was maintainable. 13. ——— Promise to pay barred Debt—Document containing requisites of s. 25. A document sufficiently complies with s. 25 of the Contract Act when it is signed by the person to be charged, and refers to the debt in such a way as to identify it, and contains a promise to pay wholly or in part the debt referred to therein, or expresses an intention to pay which can be construed to be a "promise." To create a "promise" within the meaning of the section, it is not necessary that there should be an accepted proposal reduced to writing, a written proposal, accepted before action, becoming by the definition clause a promise when accepted. The words of the section show that it is the debt, and not a sum of money in consideration of the barred debt that the promisor should refer to. In defence to a suit for rent, a tenant pleaded that a portion of the claim was barred by limitation. Plaintiff relied on a letter which had been signed by defendant, after the disputed portion had become barred, and in which the defendant, after referring to the periods in respect of which the arrears of rent were due, said, "I shall send by the end of Vysakha month." Held, that the document contained the ingredients required by s. 25, cl. On her death, shortly afterwards, execution was taken out against her representatives. The representatives objected that the decree was barred, and that the kistbundi could not be substituted for the decree. The objection was, on appeal to the High Court, allowed. A then brought a suit on the kistbundi. Held, that, at the time the kistbundi was entered into, the decree was, under the limitation law then in force, capable of being executed, and that there was, therefore, valid consideration for the kistbundi. Held, also, that even had there been no valid consideration for the kistbundi, yet the principle laid down in s. 25, cl. 3, of Act IX of 1872, and which prevailed before the passing of that Act, would have saved the kistbundi from becoming void for want of consideration. It was held that the suit was rightly dismissed on the ground that the agreement was voidable by C under the provisions of s. 19 of Act IX of 1872. 21. ——— Agreement to put estate under management of Court of Wards—Consideration for agreement. H D and S D, two brothers, constituted a joint Hindu family owning considerable landed property. H D having incurred heavy personal debts, the two brothers in 1879 united in applying to have their property taken over by the Court of Wards. This was done; and, on the 17th of June 1889, while such property was still under the management of the Court of Wards, the two brothers entered into an agreement whereby H D remained as manager of the property with an allowance of R12,000 per annum for his support, but ceded to his brother absolutely and unconditionally all his proprietary interest in the family property, and all power to make the family property liable in any way for the payment of his debts. On the 6th of October 1889, the Court of Wards released the property freed from the liabilities imposed upon it by H. D. In 1891, one B D obtained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Agra a money decree against H D. H D died in the following year, and, subsequently to his death, B D sought to execute his decree against S D as representative of H D, by attachment of property in the hands of S D. S D objected to the attachment, and his objection was allowed. B D appealed, and on this appeal it was held that, having regard to the agreement of the 17th June 1889, above referred to, the property in question could not be attached as the property of H D. The said agreement was not bad for want of consideration; the consideration being that at the request of his brother, which must be presumed from the circumstances of the case, S D had agreed to place his interest in the property under the management of the Court of Wards, and had also foregone, during the ten years that estate was under the management of the Court of Wards, the greater part of his interest in the profits of the estate, and had refrained on cessation of the Court of Wards' management from suing his brother for an account; and even if this were not so, the agreement would be

The Courts will not enter into the question of the adequacy of the consideration. 3. ——— Contract in restraint of trade—Small Cause Court, Law of—Agreement between Hindus—Acts IX of 1850 and XXVI of 1864—21 Geo. III, c. 70, ss. 17 and 18—Letters Patent, 1862, cl. 18—Letters Patent, 1865, cl. 19. The effect of Act XXVI of 1864 was that suits in the Small Cause Court were to be decided according to the law or equity administered in the High Court; by the Charter of 1862 that law or equity was to be "the law or equity which would have been applied by the Supreme Court," and by the Charter of 1865, that "which would have been applied by the High Court" under the Charter of 1862. The Stat. 21, Geo. III, c. 70, which applied to the Supreme Court, and gave to Hindus the right to have matters of contract decided by their own laws, became, if its provisions apply to the High Court, part of the law of that Court not by virtue of the Statute itself, but by virtue of the Charter which was subject to alteration by the Governor General in Council; and having ceased to have any operation as an Act, it was unnecessary to repeal it expressly by the Contract Act (IX of 1872). That Act is applicable to Hindus residing in Calcutta; therefore, where the plaintiff, a Hindu, agreed with the defendants, also Hindus, that he would cease to carry on his business in a certain locality in Calcutta, in consideration of receiving from them a specified sum, it was held, in a suit to enforce the contract, that such an agreement was void under s. 27 of the Contract Act. The words "not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act," in s. 1 of the Contract Act, apply to "any usage or custom of trade" or "any incident of any contract." 4. ——— Contract in restraint of trade—Damages—Covenant—Breach of covenant. D and E, being in England, entered into a written agreement with A, B, and C, the partners of a firm carrying on trade in Madras, to go to Madras, and there enter into the service of the firm—the service to last for five years, or to be determined at any time by certain notice being given,—and covenanted that on the expiry of the five years, or sooner determination of the service, they would not carry on within 800 miles from Madras any business carried on by the firm; and also covenanted that on such expiry, or sooner determination, they would, whenever requested by the firm so to do, return to England. In pursuance of the agreement, D and E went to Madras, and entered into the service of the firm. After it had continued for about 2½ years, the service was determined by notice from the firm. D and E then, in violation of their said covenants, refused to return to England, though requested to do so by the firm, and proceeded to set up and carry on, on their own account, business of the same kind as that carried on by the firm. Held, in a suit by the firm against D and E for damages for breaches of the said covenants, and for a perpetual injunction restraining D and E from carrying on in Madras, or within 800 miles from Madras, any business carried on by the firm, that, treating the covenant in restraint of trade as one entered into in England, it could not, even if valid by the law of England, be enforced in India, inasmuch as its object was to contravene the law of India (s. 27 of Act IX of 1872). Held, further, that that covenant would have been void by the law of England because the limit of the restriction was unreasonable, and, as no narrower limit had been mentioned in the agreement, this was not a case where the covenant could have been enforced within a narrower and reasonable limit. Held, also, that the covenant to return to England, except so far as it operated improperly in restraint of trade, was a covenant the breach of which did not in any way cause damage to the firm, and therefore such breach did not entitle them to any damages. 10. ——— Partial restraint of trade. S. 27 of the Contract Act does away with the distinction observed in the English cases between partial and total restraint of trade, and makes all contracts falling within its terms void unless they fall within its exceptions. The section was intended to prevent a partial as well as a total restraint of trade. A and B, two ghat-serangs, entered into a contract with X and five others who carried on the business of dubashes at Chittagong for the purpose of carrying on their respective business in unanimity and not injuring one another's trade. The contract, which was to last for three years, provided, inter aliâ, that A and B were to act as ghat-serangs only and do no service to ships in any other capacity ; that X and the other dubashes were to give A five vessels secured by them every year for him to act as ghat-serang ; and that A was only to act as ghat-serang to the said five ships, and, with the exception of ships for which he had previously acted as ghat-serang, he should not act as ghat-serang or do any other services for ships belonging to any one else. The contract also contained provisions as to the apportionment of the five ships so to be given to A amongst the various dubashes, and amongst such, an agreement by X to give A the third ship he should secure. It also contained a provision for the payment of R1,000 as damages by any one breaking the contract to the person who should suffer by the breach. In a suit by A against X alleging a breach of the contract by the latter in not giving him the third ship as agreed, and claiming R1,000 by way of damages, X pleaded that the contract was void under s. 27 of the Contract Act as being in restraint of trade. Held, that the contention was sound, and that the suit must be dismissed. The consideration for the promise by X to give the ship to A was the agreement by A not to carry on any other business than that of a ghat-serang, and that only in respect of his old ships and the five agreed to be so furnished to him by the dubashes. The effect of this agreement was absolutely to restrain A from carrying on the business of a dubash and to create a partial restraint on his power to carry on the business of a ghat-serang, and whether or not (even had the latter stipulation not been illegal) the contract would have been void under the provisions of s. 24 of the Act by reason of part of the consideration being the undertaking by A absolutely to refrain from carrying on the business of a dubash, it was void for both reasons under the provisions of s. 27, and A was not entitled to recover any damages under it. The agreement was to be in force for a period of five years. In a suit by the merchants for an injunction restraining the licensee from selling his salt to others: Held, that, whether or not the first of these clauses was invalid under s. 27 of the Contract Act, it was separable from the second clause, which was not bad as being in restraint of trade. 13. ——— Agreement to share profits of trade—Restraint of trade. Four persons, each of whom owned a ginning factory, entered into an agreement, which (inter alia) provided that they should charge a uniform rate of R4-8-0 per palla for ginning cotton; that of this sum, R2-8-0 should be treated as the actual cost of ginning, and that the remaining R2 should be carried to a common fund to be divided each year between the parties to the agreement in proportion to the number of ginning machines which each of them possessed. The agreement was to be in force for four years. The other parties had carried out the agreement, but the defendant, although he had carried the R2 to a separate account, refused to pay the plaintiff his share of the amount. He also refused to pay the other two parties their shares. The accounts had been duly made up, showing the sums which the defendant under the agreement had to pay both to the plaintiff and the two other parties to the agreement. The plaintiff sued the defendant for his share. The defendant contended that the agreement was in restraint of trade, and was, therefore, not enforceable. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover his share from the defendant. The only agreement sought to be enforced in this suit was the agreement to divide the profits. That was a lawful agreement founded upon consideration (viz., the mutual agreement to share each other's profits) and it might be enforced. Per FARRAN, C.J.—"I am inclined to agree with the lower Appellate Court that the stipulation, that the parties to the agreement are bound to charge at the rate of R4-8-0 per palla for ginning cotton, is a stipulation in restraint of trade." Per CANDY, J.—"I am not satisfied that the agreement in question was, as a fact, in restraint of trade, and, further, to accurately quote the words of s. 27 of the Contract Act, I am not satisfied that it was an agreement by which any one was restrained from exercising a lawful trade." At the end of a year a disagreement took place, and A ceased to act as B's assistant and began to practise in Zanzibar on his own account. B sued for an injunction to restrain him. Held, that this was not a contract in restraint of trade, and that B was entitled to an injunction restraining A from practising in Zanzibar on his own account during the period of three years. That, further, the agreement was wanting in mutuality and without consideration. That it was also void as being an attempt to suppress competition by means of contracts with independent manufacturers for their entire products, so as to monopolise the market. Under s. 27 of the Contract Act whether the restraint is general or partial, unqualified or qualified, if it is in the nature of a restraint of trade, it is void. Madhab Chunder v. Raj Coomer, *14 B. The contract contained no provision for making the submission to arbitration a rule of Court, so that 9 & 10 Will. III, c. 15, and 3 & 4 Will. IV, c. 42, s. 39, did not apply. award, the plaintiffs, under the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, had the submission to arbitration made a rule of the Court of Common Pleas. In a suit in which the plaintiffs' claim was for damages awarded by the arbitrators and incurred by the plaintiffs in respect of the breach of the contract: Held, that the award was invalid. The making the submission a rule of Court has not the effect of depriving a party of his right to revoke, at any time before the award, the authority of arbitrators whom he has appointed: still less could it have any effect to prevent him from declining to appoint an arbitrator. Held, also, that the contract was not within the scope of s. 28, Act IX of 1872. To make an agreement conform to excep. (1) of that section, the jurisdiction of the Courts must be excluded in all respects except the matter which is the result of the arbitrators' award. Agreements which exclude the jurisdiction of the Courts until an award is made, as in Scott v. Avery, 2 Jur. N. S. 815 : 5 H. L. C. 811, are within that exception, and are not illegal. Quære: Whether it was intended by that exception to authorize the Court to entertain a suit for specific performance of an agreement to refer to arbitration. Held, on appeal, that the contract was not one of the nature referred to in s. 28, Act IX of 1872. The first exception in that section applies only to a class of contracts where the parties have agreed that no action shall be brought, until some question of amount has first been decided by the arbitrators. Semble: A suit will not lie to enforce an agreement to refer to arbitration, even in the case referred to in the first exception to s. 28 of Act IX of 1872. 1. ——— Wagering contracts. In order that a transaction may fall within s. 30 of the Indian Contract Act, there must be at least two parties, the agreement between whom must be by way of wager, and both sides must be parties to the wager. It is of the essence of a wager that each side should stand to win or lose, according to the uncertain or unascertained event, in reference to which the chance or risk is taken; in other words, to make an agreement a wager there must be a common intention to bet. 2. ——— Wagering contracts—Agreement to pay differences—Surrounding circumstances—Form of contract not of moment—Bombay Act III of 1865. The law which is contained in s. 30 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) and in Bombay Act III of 1865, is that the Court must not only consider the terms in which the parties have chosen to embody their agreement, but must look to the whole nature of the transaction or institution, whatever it may be, and must prove among all the surrounding circumstances, including the conduct of the parties, with a view to ascertain what in truth was the real intention or understanding between the parties to the bargain. The actual form of the contract is of little moment, for gamblers cannot be allowed to force the jurisdiction of the Courts by the expedient of inserting provisions, which might in certain events become operative, to compel the passing of property though neither party anticipated such a contingency. The Court should be astute to discover what in fact was the common intention of both parties, and should do all that is possible to see through the ostensible and apparent transaction into the underlying reality of the bargain. 1. ——— Right to rescind—Refusal to perform—Time of essence of contract—Suit for damages for non-delivery. S. 39 of the Contract Act only enacts what was the law in England and in India before the Act was passed,—viz., that where a party to contract refuses altogether to perform, or is disabled from performing, is part of it, the other party has a right to rescind. In a suit for damages for the non-delivery of linseed upon a contract the terms of which as to payment were cash on delivery, part delivery had been made by the defendants, and a sum of R1,000 had been paid on account by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs then made a claim against the defendants for excess refraction, and the defendants thereupon refused to deliver the remainder of the linseed unless the plaintiffs paid the full amount owing for the portion that had been delivered. The plaintiffs declined to accept these terms, and the defendants then cancelled the contract. Held, that there was not such a refusal on the part of the plaintiffs to perform their part of the contract as to entitle the defendants to rescind under s. 39 of the Contract Act. 3. ——— Mortgage—Part breach of contract by mortgagee—Rescission of contract—Acquiescence—Suit by mortgagee for interest due under the mortgage as regards the part fulfilled. A mortgaged certain land to B for R800. Under the terms of the mortgage deed, B was to pay R500 of the advance to C in discharge of a previous mortgage executed by A in favour of C. Of the balance of R300 B was to retain R200 in payment of a previous debt of A due to him, and the balance of R100 was to be paid to A. B paid the said R100, retained the R200, but neglected to pay the said R500 to C, who sued A and recovered the debt by attachment and sale of A's moveable property. After eight years from the date of the mortgage, B brought a suit to recover the interest due under the mortgage on R300 only. Held, that, under s. 39 of the Contract Act, A was entitled to cancel the contract of mortgage owing to B's conduct, but that he was bound to give up the benefit he had received, viz., R300, and pay interest thereon up to the date of cancellation. B was not entitled to treat the original mortgage as a mortgage in force with all its stipulations for R300 instead of R800, and on that view to sue for interest alone. 1. ——— Joint liability—Suit against joint contractors—Res judicata. A suit in which a decree has been obtained against one of the several joint makers of a promissory note is a bar to a subsequent suit against the others. The effect of s. 43 of the Contract Act is not to create a joint and several liability in such a case. That section merely prohibits the defendant in such a suit pleading in abatement, and thus places the liability arising from the breach of a joint contract and the liability arising from a tort on the same footing. The rule laid down in the case of King v. Hoare, 13 M. & W. 494, and Brinsmead v. Harrison, L. R. 7 C. P. 547, is one of principle, not merely of procedure. In February 1877, V, at the request of his wife, as compensation to his sons for the loss of their interests in the property sold, bonâ fide assigned to his sons his share in a house, No. 9, A Street. In October and November 1877, M and S each obtained decrees against V for bonâ fide trading debts and issued execution against the house No. 9, A Street. The mother of the infant sons intervened and the attachment was raised, and M and S were referred to a regular suit to establish their claims. In January 1878 V was declared insolvent. M and S respectively sued to have it declared that the house No. 9, A Street, was liable to be attached and sold in satisfaction of their decrees against V. Held, reversing the decree of KERNAN, J., that the plaintiffs, by obtaining decrees against V, had exhausted their remedy, and that a second suit against the sons of V was not maintainable. Hemendro Coomar Mullick v. *Rajendro Lall Moonshee, I. R. 4 A. The plaintiffs then made a claim against the defendants for excess refraction and the defendants thereupon refused to deliver the remainder of the linseed unless the plaintiffs paid the full amount owing for the portion which had been delivered. The plaintiffs declined to accept these terms, and the defendants then cancelled the contract. Held by GARTH, C.J., that s. 51 of the Act was not applicable, inasmuch as it did not appear that the plaintiffs were unwilling to pay for the deliveries which the defendants refused to make, and that time was not of the essence of the contract so as to bring the case within the provision of s. 55 of the Act. Held, by MARKBY, J., that s. 51 would have applied if the defendants, when they came to make delivery, had insisted upon the contract being strictly performed and upon payment being made on delivery ; and that, if the defendants had so insisted, time might have been of the essence of the contract within the meaning of s. 55. 2. ——— Sale of Goods where no time is fixed—Mutual obligations to pay for and deliver. In an action for damages for breach of contract : Held, that no time being fixed for payment or delivery by a contract for the purchase and sale of certain goods, the construction of law is, that the seller will deliver on payment of the price, and that the buyer will pay the price on receiving the goods, and either party is competent to call upon the other within a reasonable time, to fulfil his part of the agreement, if ready to fulfil his own. The plaintiffs proved that they were ready and willing to carry out their part of the bargain and had made preparations with the object of having the money ready to pay for the cotton on delivery. Held, that, under s. 51 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), they had done sufficient to entitle them to recover damages, and were not obliged to show that they made an actual tender of the money. 1. ——— ——— Breach of contract—Impossibility to perform a portion arising after execution. A contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, by which the plaintiff agreed to cultivate indigo for the defendant, for a specified number of years, in certain specified lands situated in different villages, with respect to portion of which lands the plaintiff was a sub-tenant only. Subsequently, during the continuance of the contract, the plaintiff lost possession of those lands, through his immediate landlord having failed to pay the rent, and having been in consequence ejected therefrom by the owner. In a suit by him, under the above circumstances, to have so much of the contract as related to those lands cancelled, on the ground that it had become impossible of performance through no neglect on his part: Held, that such a case came within the provisions of cl. 2, s. 56 of Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act), and that the mere fact that the plaintiff could have paid up the debt due by his immediate landlord and so retained possession of the land was not sufficient to constitute such an omission or neglect on his part as to take it out of the provisions of that section. 2. ——— ——— ——— Contract to carry Passengers in Ship—Passengers infected with Disease—Excuse for non-performance of contract—Implied term in contract—Performance become illegal—Penal Code (XLV of 1860), s. 269. By a contract made with the plaintiffs, the defendants agreed to carry from Bombay to Jeddah, in their steamer Mobile, 500 pilgrims who were about to arrive in Bombay from Singapore in the plaintiffs' ship, the Stura. The defendants were to be paid at the rate of R26 per head, and the ship Mobile was to receive the pilgrims on the 3rd May 1888. The Stura arrived in Bombay on the 1st May with about 600 pilgrims on board, and on the 2nd May the plaintiffs gave notice to the defendants that 500 of them were ready to go on board the Mobile on the next day in accordance with the contract. The defendants refused to receive the pilgrims on board the Mobile on the ground that they had come to Bombay in the Stura, and that during the voyage of that ship to Bombay there had been an outbreak of small-pox on board; that the 500 pilgrims had been in close contact with those who had been suffering from the disease, and that on the 3rd May fresh cases were occurring among the pilgrims brought from Singapore. They pleaded that under these circumstances they were not bound to ship and carry the 500 pilgrims, contending (i) that it was an implied term in the contract that the 500 pilgrims should be free from small-pox or other dangerous disease, and (ii) that the performance of the contract had under the circumstances become unlawful (s. 269 of the Penal Code and s. 56 of the Contract Act). Held, that the defendants were bound to carry out the contract. In the absence of proof, that a term providing that the pilgrims should be free from small-pox was to be implied by the usage of the pilgrim-carrying trade, there could be no reason for implying it. The possibility that some of the 500 pilgrims might have the germs of the disease in them owing to their exposure to infection, might make carrying them more expensive and onerous, but it was a contingency which from the very nature of the trade must have been known to the defendants, and if they wished to provide against it they should have done so by express terms. Held, also, that the performance of the contract had not become unlawful. The risk of disease was not greater than would necessarily be incurred in every crowded emigrant ship. But, even if special precautions were desirable under the circumstances, it was for the defendants, who had entered into an absolute agreement, to have taken them. 2. ——— and s. 63—Novation—Contract, novation of—Satisfaction of contract. The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of R1,173 due on a bond. It was found as a fact that after the due date of the bond an arrangement was come to between the plaintiff and the defendant by which the plaintiff agreed to accept in satisfaction of what was due to him at the time of the arrangement R400 in cash and a fresh bond for R701, payable by instalments; and it was further found that the plaintiff never intended or agreed to accept the naked promise of the defendant to pay the R400 and to give the bond for R701. The defendant did not pay the R400 or give the bond, but pleaded that there had been a novation of the original contract by reason of the subsequent agreement, and that the suit, being based on the original contract, could not be maintained, and he relied on the provisions of ss. 62 and 63 of the Contract Act in support of his contention. Held, that neither section had any bearing on the case, and that upon the breach by the defendant of the terms which he had made, and upon the non-performance by him of the satisfaction which he had promised to give, the parties were relegated to their rights and liabilities under the original contract, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he claimed. Held, further, that s. 62 of the Contract Act is merely a legislative expression of the common law, and the provisions thereof do not apply to a case where there has been a breach of the original contract before the subsequent agreement is come to. By the mortgage-deed the mortgage-debt was made repayable on the 28th December 1896. On the 12th May 1897, the first defendant sold it by auction under the power of sale contained in the mortgage-deed, and the second defendant was the purchaser. The plaintiff now sued to set aside the sale and be allowed to redeem, alleging that on the day before the sale the first defendant had orally promised and agreed to postpone the sale for four days, and that the second defendant had notice of this fact before he purchased the property. Held, that the said promise or agreement, if made by the mortgagee, was not an extension of time for the performance of the plaintiff's (mortgagor's) promise to him, which was to pay the mortgage-debt on the 28th December 1896, but was an agreement to refrain from exercising, for a stated period, the right

It was immaterial that the discharge had been given in pursuance of the alleged oral agreement, which, though not admissible in evidence, was not illegal. 2. ——— Retention by debtor of debt as part of consideration for another contract. In contemplation of a sale of land by the debtor to the creditor, it was agreed that the book-debt should be retained by the former in satisfaction of part of the price, but the parties failing to agree as to certain other terms, a suit, brought by the intending vendor for specific performance, was dismissed on the ground that no effectual agreement had been made. Held, that this decree brought about a new state of things and imposed a new obligation on the debtor who could no longer allege that he was absolved by the creditor's being entitled to the land instead of the money. He became bound to pay that which he had retained in payment of his land, the date of the decree giving the date of the failure of an existing consideration, within the meaning of Art. 97 of the Limitation Act, 1877. The matter might also be regarded as falling under s. 65 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), under which, when the agreement was decreed ineffectual, the debtor having previously received an advantage under it, was made liable "to restore" that advantage or "to make compensation for it." 3. ——— Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 97—Agreement to sell—Suit for specific performance—Agreement declared unenforceable—Alternative claim for refund of consideration paid thereunder—Limitation. The defendants, against whom a decree for foreclosure was outstanding, agreed to sell certain immovable property to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff paid into Court, as part of the consideration, the amount due by the defendants under the foreclosure decree. The defendants neither executed a conveyance of the property which they had agreed to sell, nor returned to the plaintiff the money which he had paid on their behalf. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendants, claiming in the alternative either a decree for specific performance of the agreement to sell or a refund of the money paid by him as part of the consideration for the sale agreed upon. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree for specific performance. On appeal by the defendants, it was held by the High Court (i) that, the terms of the agreement to sell not being satisfactorily proved, no decree for specific performance could be made; (ii) that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to get back the money which he had paid under the agreement; (iii) that the plaintiff's alternative claim for a refund on failure of consideration was governed as to limitation by Art. 97 of the second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, and was not barred by limitation, inasmuch as limitation only began to run from the date of the High Court's decree declaring the agreement to sell to be unenforceable. Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh, *I. 4. ——— Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 97—Contract—Failure of consideration—Suit to recover money paid—Limitation. One, Farzand Ali, negotiated on behalf of his wife, Najm-un-nissa, a mortgage for R26,000 in favour of Jamna Das. This mortgage included two items, one of R3,403-11-6 and the other of R679-10-6. The former was a debt due by Farzand Ali to Jamna Das, for which Farzand Ali represented his wife was willing to become security; the latter was a sum taken by Farzand Ali in cash on the representation that it would be paid by him to the mortgagor on suit by the mortgagee for recovery of the mortgage-money. The first Court decreed the plaintiff's claim in full; but on appeal the High Court exonerated the mortgagor from payment of the two sums mentioned above. After the death of Farzand Ali the mortgagee sued the representatives of Farzand Ali for recovery of these two items. Held, that the mortgagee had a good cause of action in respect of which limitation only began to run from the date of the decree of the High Court, which decided that the sum claimed could not be recovered from Najm-un-nissa as part of the mortgage debt. Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh, *I. This mortgagee, however, obtained a decree and order in execution for the sale of the other property, on which his mortgage was the second. Of the latter property, the plaintiffs, who also represented the first mortgagee, had become purchasers, and they filed objections to the sale. These were disallowed, and they thereupon paid into Court money sufficient to satisfy the decree in order to prevent the sale. Held, that this was not a voluntary payment, nor a payment of money equitably due; but one made under compulsion of law, i.e., under pressure of the execution-proceedings. Held, further, that this might be recovered in a suit for a money-decree, the remedy not being confined to the execution-proceedings. expended on the marriage. On its being contended that defendant was under no obligation to provide for the expenses of his brother's daughter's marriage: Held, that defendant was liable, the marriage having been properly performed. Held, further, that the suit was maintainable, though it had been brought by the mother of the bride, and not by the bride herself. Semble: That the mother was, within the meaning of s. 69 of the Indian Contract Act, interested in making the payment which had given rise to the action. 1. ——— Illegal collection of Cess —Bom. Act III of 1869, s. 8—Suit to recover cess fraudulently levied. The plaintiffs sued to recover back from the defendant the amount levied by him as local cess on certain wanta lands belonging to the plaintiffs, the defendant claiming to be the superior holder of the village in which the lands were situated. The amount was levied by the defendant through the assistance of the mamlatdar under Bombay Act III of 1869, s. 8. The defendant contended that, in consequence of a demand from Government, he had paid local cess on the whole of his talukh, including the village in which the plaintiffs' lands were situated, and was, therefore, entitled, under ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), to recover from them the amount which he had paid to Government as a portion of the cess which rateably fell upon their lands. It was found that the defendant was not the proprietor of the lands held by the plaintiffs, and that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between them; also that defendant paid local cess for the plaintiffs' lands fraudulently and with the intention of thereby making evidence of title to their lands, knowing that he had no lawful or just claim to them. Held, that the defendant was not a person "interested in the payment" of the money made by him to Government within the meaning of s. 69 of the Contract Act, assuming that a portion of that sum was demanded by Government in respect of the plaintiffs' wanta lands, and that they were "bound by law to pay" it to Government. Held, further, that the defendant did not "lawfully" make the payment within the meaning of s. 70 of the Act, inasmuch as he did so fraudulently and dishonestly. 2. ——— Suit for Contribution—Summary Settlement (Bom.) Act VII of 1863, ss. 2, 6, 9—Inamdar—Suit for Contribution. The plaintiff was the jaghirdar of a village in which the defendant held certain land as inamdar on the annual payment of a certain quit-rent. The plaintiff's jaghir was, in point of time, subsequent to the defendant's inam. Ever since the time of the jaghir, the ancestors of the defendant (and after them the defendant himself) paid the quit-rent to the ancestors of the plaintiff, and after them to the plaintiff himself. In 1869 the summary settlement was introduced into the village under Bombay Act VII of 1863. Under s. 9 of that Act, a notice was served upon the plaintiff by the Collector in respect of the village, and he accepted the settlement provided in ss. 2 and 6 of the Act. Government, accordingly, granted the village to him at the summary settlement of two annas in the rupee of the full assessment. No notice was served upon the defendant under the Act, nor did the plaintiff inform the defendant of the notice which the plaintiff had received in respect of the village. The certificate issued by the Collector to the plaintiff, previously to the grant of the sanad regarding the settlement contained the following passage:—"Before the villages (Vesu and Sanya) were granted in jaghir, lands were held by peta-inamdars over which the jaghirdar has no right. They are entered in the sanad only for the purpose of receiving the settlement and paying it over to the Sarkar." In 1877 the plaintiff sued the defendant for the amount of three years' summary settlement which he (plaintiff) had paid to Government on account of the defendant's land. Held, that ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) did not apply to the case. 6. ——— Meaning of "lawfully"—Mortgage—Decree enforcing hypothecation—Satisfaction of decree by person not subject to legal obligation thereunder—Suit for contribution brought by such person against judgment-debtor—Gratuitous payment. The widow of D, a separated Hindu, hypothecated certain immoveable property which had belonged to her husband. The immediate reversioners to D's estate were his nephew S and the three sons of his brother O. After the widow's death, the mortgagee put his bond in suit, impleading as defendants S, two of S's four sons, and the three sons of O. Only the three last-mentioned persons resisted the suit, and the mortgagee obtained a decree directing the sale of the mortgaged property in satisfaction of his claim. From the operation of this decree S was wholly exempted, and his sons were made liable only to pay their own costs. Before any sale in execution of the decree could take place, the sons of S paid the amount of the decree into Court, thus saving the property from sale. They subsequently sued the sons of O for contribution in respect of this payment. It was found that, at the time when the payment was made, S was a member of a joint Hindu family with the defendants and that his sons, the plaintiffs, had, at that time, no interest in the property by transfer from him. Held, that at the time of the payment the plaintiffs could not properly be regarded as in the position of co-mortgagors with the defendants, so as to have an equitable lien upon the property they had saved from sale; that it was not a case of a payment which the defendants were bound to make in which the plaintiffs were "interested" within the meaning of s. 69 of the Contract Act; and that therefore the fiction of an implied request by the defendants to the plaintiff to make the payment could not be imported into the case, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to contribution. Held, also, that there was no such relationship between the parties as would create or justify the inference of any right in the plaintiffs to look to the defendants for compensation so as to make s. 70 of the Contract Act applicable; and that, if the plaintiffs as mere volunteers chose to pay the money not for the defendants, but for themselves, they could not claim the benefits of that section. The principle of the decision in Pancham Singh v. Ali Ahmed, I. L. R. 4 All. 58, has been recognized and provided for in the Transfer of Property Act. By the use of the word "lawfully" in s. 70 of the Contract Act, the Legislature had in contemplation cases in which a person held such a relation to another as either directly to create or reasonably to justify the inference that by some act done for another person, the person doing the act was entitled to look for compensation to the person for whom it was done. Ram Tuhul Singh v. Bisseswar Lal Sahoo, *L. Subsequently B sued K to recover the sum which he had paid on account of revenue. Held, that the claim did not fall within the provisions of ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act, and the fact that the plaintiff had been a loser by his wrongful act, or that the defendant had been benefited by the payment he made, would give him no right of action against her. Tiluk Chand v. Soudamini Dasi, *I. 8. ——— Voluntary payment—Landlord and tenant—Government revenue, payment of, by patnidar—Defaulting proprietor, liability of, to recoup patnidar who pays Government revenue for him, when a separate account has been opened—Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), ss. 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, and 54. A patnidar who had made certain payments on account of Government revenue due by his superior landlords who had defaulted, although a separate account had been opened for the payment of such Government revenue, brought a suit to recover the amount so paid. In such suit it was contended that the payments were merely voluntary, and that the plaintiff could not recover them. Held, that the plaintiff was "interested" in making the payments, and was therefore entitled to recover under s. 69 of the Contract Act. Held, further, that s. 70 of the Contract Act applied to the case, inasmuch as the word "does" in that section includes payments of money, and also that the plaintiff was entitled to recover under s. 9 of the Revenue Sale Law, as he believed in good faith that his interest would be endangered by a sale taking place. The liability of a landlord under s. 9 of the Revenue Sale Law to recoup a person paying Government revenue for him does not depend upon the question of whether the money was originally deposited or not, but accrues upon its being credited in payment of the arrears. S. 69 cannot apply, as the latter person, not being assessed, was not legally bound to pay the tax and s. 70 cannot apply as the persons paying the tax did so on his own account and not on behalf of another. 1. ——— Repairs by Government to a tank in which zamindar is interested—Suit against zamindars for share of cost. The Government repaired a certain tank from which were irrigated lands in the zamindari of the defendants, and also raiyatwari villages held under Government which had been severed from the zamindari. It was found that the defendants knew that the repairs which were necessary for the preservation of the tank were being carried out, and did not wish to execute them themselves except as contractors, and that they had enjoyed the benefit of the work done, and further that Government had carried out the repairs not intending to do them gratuitously for the defendants. It was not found that there was any request, either express or implied, on the part of the defendants to the Government to execute the repairs. In a suit by the Secretary of State to recover from the defendants their share of the cost incurred: Held, that the plaintiff was entitled under the Contract Act, s. 70, to recover part of the cost incurred, estimated with reference to the irrigable area of the villages owned by the plaintiff and defendants, respectively. In paying the money the treasury officer neglected no reasonable precaution, nor was he in any way guilty of carelessness. Held, that the defendant was bound to repay the money received by him, and that he could not defend himself by the plea that he had paid it to his principal; nor could the Court allow that the circumstance that the principal was himself a servant of the plaintiff, and in the course of his employment obtained facilities for committing the fraud, relieved the defendant from his liability. 2. ——— Arrears of Revenue—Voluntary Payment—Mistake—Payment under a mistake. The plaintiffs, believing that they held a four annas share, and the defendants the remaining twelve annas share, in a patni, the revenue of which was in arrears, paid to the zamindar, on the 8th of March 1876, a portion of the arrears corresponding to the share in the patni to which they considered themselves entitled. It was afterwards decided, in a suit between the parties, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any share in the patni, and that the defendants were entitled to the whole sixteen annas thereof. Subsequently to this decision, the defendants, in paying up the arrears of revenue due on the patni, took the benefit of the payment made by the plaintiffs on the 8th of March 1876, and paid in only so much as, together with the previous payment, made up the whole arrear. The plaintiffs then brought the present suit to recover from the defendants the amount of the payment made to the zamindar on the 8th of March 1876. Held, that the payment was not a voluntary payment, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. In pursuance of this agreement, B paid a sum of money to A, but, upon discovering that the alleged will was not a will at all, sued to recover back the money so paid by her. Held, that under the circumstances the taking of the agreement was a fraud upon B, that the payment of the sum of money by B was not a voluntary payment, and could be recovered back, and that the Court could not apportion the amount (if any) that might be claimable by B for work done under the agreement. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a claim, which was disallowed, as he had not then obtained, and consequently could not produce, the sale certificate. In order to prevent the sale, he then paid the amount of the defendant's decree into Court, and subsequently instituted a suit against the defendant to recover the amount so paid into Court to prevent the sale. 2. ——— s. 73 and ss. 77, 83, 84, and 107—Re-sale, notice of—Right of unpaid vendors—Nominal damages. The defendant purchased from the plaintiffs a cargo of Watson's Hartley steam coal at R21 per ton, to arrive by ship Grecian, but on its arrival the defendant, on being called upon to do so, refused to take delivery, on the ground that the usual certificate that the coal was what it was stated to be did not accompany the cargo. The plaintiffs thereupon gave notice to the defendant that, unless delivery were taken, the coal would be sold on his account and at his risk ; and on the defendant repeating his refusal to take delivery, the plaintiffs caused the coal to be sold, and it was purchased in the name of M & Co., for R13 per ton. In a suit, which was stated in the plaint to be for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs on the re-sale, the Court found that the plaintiffs themselves were the real purchasers, and that the sale had taken place without proper notice, and under the circumstances was invalid. Held, both in the lower Court and on appeal, that the plaintiffs had, by the way in which they had dealt with the coal, rendered themselves accountable to the defendant in respect thereof, and that, notwithstanding the defendant had committed a breach of the contract in refusing to take delivery of the coal, the plaintiffs were bound to give an account of the coal and prove that they had sustained a loss on the re-sale, and on their omission to do so they were not entitled to recover any damages. Held on appeal, per MARKBY, J., that the plaintiffs were not entitled to put aside the sale as invalid and treat the case as one for damages for breach of contract. Under the circumstances, they were not entitled to even nominal damages. The mere shipment on board the Grecian did not pass the property in the coal to the defendant under s. 77 of Act IX of 1872. Per PONTIFEX, J.—Whether, by virtue of the contract and the subsequent appropriation and shipment, the property in the coal passed or did not pass to the defendant within the meaning of s. 84 or s. 83 of Act IX of 1872; even if the sale were invalid, the plaintiffs were not entitled, considering their conduct in dealing with the coal, and the concealment of their interest in the purchase, and in the absence of satisfactory evidence of what ultimately became of the coal, to recover any damages. 1. ——— Penalty—Suit by a joint proprietor for arrears of rent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 29 (b)—Kabuliat executed prior to—Covenant for a higher rate—Enhancement of rent—Bengal Rent Act (VIII of 1869), s. 5. In a kabuliat executed in 1881, it was stipulated that upon the expiry of the term of seven years fixed therein, a fresh lease should be executed; that should the defendant cultivate the lands without executing a fresh kabuliat, he would pay rent at the rate of R4 a bigha (a rate much higher than that fixed for the term). No fresh kabuliat was executed on expiry of the term, and the plaintiff, a part proprietor, collecting rent separately, brought this suit for arrears of rent at the new rate of R4. The defendant objected, inter alia, that the plaintiff, being a part proprietor, was not entitled to sue for enhanced rent, and that the stipulation for the higher rate was a mere threat, and not intended to be carried out. The first Court gave a decree at an enhanced rate, or an addition of two annas in the rupee, in terms of s. 29 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the whole suit, on the ground that the suit being one for enhanced rent, and the plaintiff a part proprietor, the suit did not lie. Held, that, the kabuliat having been executed before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, the present case did not come within the operation of that Act, and the plaintiff, although a part proprietor, could bring this suit. Ram Chunder Chackrabutty v. Giridhur Dutt, I. L. R. 19 Calc. 755, followed. Held by PRINSEP and GHOSE, JJ. (RAMPINI, J., dissenting), that the additional rent was intended to be enforceable only on default to execute a fresh kabuliat, and the so-called agreement to pay at the enhanced rate of R4 was in the nature of a penalty. Held by RAMPINI, J.—The plea that the rate of R4 was a penalty was not taken by the defendant in his written statement, and, in any case, the stipulation did not come within the purview of s. 74 of the Indian Contract Act, and the suit was not for compensation for breach of contract, but for rent at a rate which the defendant has agreed to pay from a certain time. Held, also, that s. 29 (d) of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no retrospective effect, and does not apply to the present kabuliat, which was executed before the passing of that Act. That s. 5 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 did not debar an agreement by an occupancy raiyat to pay whatever rate he pleased. Banke Behari v. Sundar Lal, I. L. R. 15 All. 232, referred to. Subsequently on a settlement of account between the parties, it was agreed that a lower rate of interest would be chargeable on the amount remaining due, if paid within a certain date; but, if not so paid, the higher rate originally contracted for would be payable. Held, that the stipulation for the payment of interest at the higher rate cannot be regarded as a penalty, that being the rate originally contracted for. Rate of fees.

I am bound to put up a board with the rates of fees to be collected by me and my name in English and Canarese in a public place in the market. If I, my agent, or servant were to act contrary to the above regulations, I shall be liable to pay a fine not exceeding R50 imposed by the President of the Taluk Board, or I am not entitled to object, if my gutta is put up for auction again, subject to the loss that may be sustained by the Taluk Board. Under the terms of the above contract, the President of the Taluk Board imposed on the defendant a fine of R20 on 4th November 1902 in respect of illegal excessive collections made by his agent. The defendant not having paid the fine, the President instituted a civil suit for the amount of the fine on 4th January 1904. Held, that the suit was maintainable, although the acts of the defendant's agent amounted to a criminal offence and no criminal proceedings were taken against the agent. It is doubtful whether the doctrine that a person injured by a felonious act cannot seek civil redress without prosecuting the felon in the criminal Courts applies in India; and the doctrine does not apply where a principal is sued in the civil Courts in respect of the wrongful acts of his agent. Held, also, that the agreement in question was not a bail-bond or recognisance within the meaning of the exception to s. 74 of the Contract Act, and though given for the performance of a public duty, it was not given under the provisions of any law. The exception to s. 74 did not apply and the plaintiff was entitled to reasonable damages under the section. Held, also, that the suit was based on contract and for purposes of limitation fell within Art. 68 or 115 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act and not under Art. 6 of the schedule. Held, further, that the penal clauses of ss. 162C and 162D of the Local Board's Act did not preclude the plaintiff from suing the defendant on his contract. PRESIDENT OF THE TALUK BOARD, KUNDAPUR v. BURDE LAKSHMINARAYANA KAMPTHI (1907) . . . I. L. R. 31 Mad. 54

6. ——— Expl., effect of—Mortgage—Simple mortgage, personal liability under, exists unless special contract to the contrary—Absence of specific prayer in plaint no ground for refusing appropriate relief—Delay no abandonment of right. In the case of simple mortgages, the personal liability of the mortgagor exists, unless there is a specific contract to the contrary. Wahid-un-Nissa v. Gobardhan Dass, I. L. R. 22 All. 453, 461, referred to. Where the plaint asks for a decree against the defendants as members of the family and "for such other relief as the Court may think fit," the Court ought to grant the plaintiff such appropriate relief as he is entitled to and such relief cannot be refused on the ground that there is no specific prayer for such relief. Though it is within the scope of the authority of the managing member of a Hindu family to execute the mortgage so as to bind the family assets, the plaintiff in a suit on such mortgage is not entitled to a personal decree against a defendant member of the family who is not a party to the mortgage in respect of the money alleged to be in his hand. Mere delay by the plaintiff in suing to enforce a contract is no evidence of an intention not to enforce its terms. Under the explanation to s. 74 of the Indian Contract Act, it is for the Court to decide on the facts of the particular case whether a stipulation for increased interest from the date of default is or is not a stipulation by way of penalty. It was not the intention of the Legislature to enact that such stipulations are always to be considered penal. The explanation was simply intended to meet the decisions in which it was held that such stipulations are not penal and must be enforced. ABBAKKE HEGGADTHI v. KINHIAMMA SHETTY (1906) . . . I. L. 1. ——— Excep. 1—Possession of Goods by person other than owner—Title conveyed by vendor to vendee. The plaintiff let to D a piano on hire on the following terms:—"At R30 per month; if duly paid for and kept three years, shall then become the property of hirer." These terms were embodied in a voucher which was signed by D. The monthly hire was not regularly paid, and the plaintiffs sued for and obtained a decree for a portion of the hire up to May 1873. Subsequently in that month, D sold the piano to the defendant who obtained delivery of it in June. In a suit by the plaintiff in trover for conversion of the piano, the Judge found that the defendant acted in good faith. Held, that the possession acquired by D was not possession by consent of the owner within the meaning of s. 108 of Act IX of 1872, excep. 1, and that he did not, by sale to the defendant, transfer the ownership in the piano to him. Excep. 1 of s. 108 does not apply where there is only a qualified possession, such as a hirer of goods has, or where the possession is for a specific purpose. GREENWOOD v. HOLQUETTE . 12 B. L. R. 42 : 20 W. R. 467

2. ——— Possession with consent of Owner—Bailment—Bailee—Sale by bailee of goods bailed—Title of vendee. The general rule laid down by s. 108 of the Contract Act that no seller can give to a buyer a better title than he has himself is qualified by excep. 1 to that section. But the possession contemplated by that exception does not extend to every case of detention of chattels with the owner's consent. The exception has particular relation to the cases of persons allowed by owners to have the indicia of property, or possession under such circumstances as may naturally induce others to regard them as owners and constituting some degree of negligence or defect of precaution imputable to the true owners. Where, however, the detention of a chattel is allowed for a particular limited purpose, there is not a possession such as is required by the exception. In the case of a gratuitous bailment of a chattel, the possession remains constructively with the owner. S left with C a buffalo and a calf, to be taken care of during his absence from home. C sold the animals to M. S sued to recover them. Held, that the bailment by S to C was a gratuitous one, or else a mere custody by C for S; that S was, therefore, at the time of sale in constructive possession of the animals, and C could not transfer to M an ownership that he had not himself. The plaintiff and his wife had lived together; and the latter, with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, had charge of the jewel-case containing the ornaments in question, which, however, belonged exclusively to the plaintiff. Without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, his wife pledged these ornaments with the defendant as security for the repayment of certain promissory notes passed by her in favour of the defendant. After her death, the defendant claimed payment of the promissory notes from the plaintiff. The plaintiff refused to pay, and sued the defendant for the value of the ornaments. Held, that the plaintiff's wife had not in the beginning, nor did she subsequently acquire, such possession as would validate the pledge by virtue of the provisions of s. 178 of the Contract Act. To create a pledge under that section, the pledgor must be in juridical possession of the goods; mere custody will not suffice. SEAGER v. HUKMA KESSA I. L. R. 24 Bom. 458

In a suit by the owner against the hirer and the pledgee to recover the jewel: Held, that the pledgee was liable to pay the owner the value of the jewel. Per SUBRAHMANIA AYYAR, J.—Ss. 178 and 179 of the Indian Contract Act contemplate mutually exclusive cases. S. 179 refers to certain cases, where the pawnor has possession, which is necessarily traceable to, and is an incident of, a limited interest he has in the goods pledged. S. 178 refers to cases where a pawnor has a document of title to goods or has possession of goods independently of any interests of his therein, though, as one invested with the symbol of property, he may, notwithstanding the absence of any interest, make a valid transfer of the goods in certain circumstances. Though the pawnor had possession, it was traceable to, and was an incident of, his right as the hirer of the jewel. It was not such possession as is contemplated by s. 178. A pleader (as the Court found) at the request of his client disbursed moneys for out-fees in a suit in which he was retained, and took a promissory note for the amount of the disbursements. Held, that the promissory note was, within the meaning of s. 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act, an agreement respecting the amount of payment for charges incurred or disbursements made by the pleader in respect of the suit in which he had been retained, and as it had not been filed in Court as required by the section, it was invalid. ——— ——— Contract by Agent—Principal resident abroad—Presumption of personal liability of Agent—Rebutted where contract made in name of Principal. Plaintiff telegraphed to P. & Co. (who were the managing agents of a company having its registered office in England, but carrying on business in India) for a quotation as to the price of sugar. P. & Co. replied in their own name, merely quoting the rate, and plaintiff accepted the offer and forwarded a deposit. On the following day P. & Co. addressed a letter to plaintiff, with which was enclosed a memorandum of sale, which contained all the terms of the contract. The letter and the memorandum bore the name of the company printed at the top and P. & Co. signed both as "managing agents." Delay having occurred in the delivery of sugar, plaintiff instituted the present suit against P & Co. for the return of the deposit and for damages. P & Co., in their written statement, pleaded that the suit was not maintainable against them, inasmuch as they were merely agents. Held, (i) that the contract, for the alleged breach of which the suit was brought, was that which had been formally reduced to writing in the memorandum of sale; (ii) that the company was resident abroad, and that a presumption, in consequence, arose under s. 230 of the Contract Act that the defendants, though the agents of that company, were personally liable under the contract; (iii) that this presumption of law is one which can be rebutted, and is rebutted when the foreign principal is, in writing, made the contracting party, and the contract is made directly in his name. ——— Agent—Undisclosed Principal—"Discloses himself"—Strict construction. S. 231 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) deals with the rights (a) of the principal and (b) of the third party, in cases where the contract is entered into by the agent without disclosing the principal. The first clause refers to the general case and the rule is that the third party shall have as against the undisclosed principal the same rights which he would have against the agent, if the agent had been the principal. The second clause deals with the particular case, where the principal discloses himself before the contract is completed. The second clause should be read as governed by the first clause. The words "discloses himself" in s. 231 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) should be construed strictly. Per BATCHELOR, J.—It has been warmly urged that the third party's right to repudiate, which is allowed, if the principal himself makes the disclosure, should not be refused merely because the disclosure is made by some other person or the information reaches him from some other source. But the argument to my mind is not convincing. For whatever may be the subjective belief or conviction of the third party, it is conceivable that he should have no right to avoid the contract unless the principal, hitherto undisclosed, comes out into the open and claims the benefit of the contract for himself, and there would be no hardship in requiring the third party to challenge the alleged principal as to whether he makes this claim or not. 1. ——— Jurisdiction of District Court—Suit for Dissolution of Partnership and for Account. The suit was brought for a dissolution of partnership between plaintiff and first defendant, and for an account as between them. It was alleged in the plaint that plaintiff and first defendant entered into partnership in 1864 to work a jungle in the North Arcot District which had been leased to plaintiff for three years ; that fourth defendant was subsequently admitted a partner, and that the contract was carried on under the style of R T & Co. ; that in March 1867, fourth defendant took up a contract in Madras and another general partnership was established, of which plaintiff and first defendant were members ; that the funds of the first firm became incorporated in the second firm, which was styled K T & K, and that this firm undertook several contracts in Madras and Chingleput ; and finally, that the cause of action was the refusal of first defendant to account, and accrued in North Arcot District, where all the defendants resided permanently. The District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that, under s. 265 of the Contract Act, he had no jurisdiction. Held on appeal, that the District Court of North Arcot had jurisdiction, as the defendants were resident within the district ; that the provision in the Contract Act is permissive, and does not prohibit a suit elsewhere than at the place where the partnership was carried on if a sufficient ground of jurisdiction exists. Accordingly, where a suit was instituted in the District Court of Ahmedabad by some members of a partnership (which, however, was not dissolved at the date of the suit) for the winding up of the business of a ginning factory and for distributing among the shareholders any surplus that might remain, after providing for the payment of its debts, under s. 265 of Act IX of 1872, and the Assistant Judge, to whom it was referred for trial by the District Judge, directed the dissolution of the partnership and the winding up of its business, the High Court on appeal reversed the decree of the Assistant Judge, and returned the plaint to the plaintiffs for its presentation to the proper Court. Quære : Whether the District Judge had power, under the Bombay Civil Courts Act XIV of 1869, to refer to the Assistant Judge a case falling under

4. ——— Jurisdiction of District Court—Winding up Partnership—Subordinate Court—Bengal Civil Courts Act (VI of 1871), s. 11. The Court of a Subordinate Judge is inferior to the Court of a District Judge within the meaning of s. 11 of the Civil Courts Act. The word "may" in s. 265 of the Contract Act has a somewhat similar force to the words "it shall be lawful" in a statute, which merely make that legal and possible which there would otherwise be no right or authority to do. And the words "may apply" in the section create a new jurisdiction, which must be exercised strictly in accordance with the statute which creates it, that is to say, the jurisdiction created by the section must be exercised exclusively by a Court not inferior to the Court of a District Judge, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the place or principal place of business of the firm, which it is sought to wind up, is situated. It was the intention of the Legislature, in enacting s. 265 of the Contract Act, to create a new jurisdiction to be exercised exclusively by the Court of the District Judge; and in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the members of a partnership, or their representatives, cannot obtain the relief mentioned in the section except by resorting to that Court. The presumption that the existing jurisdiction of a Court is not intended to be taken away unless express words have been used for that purpose usually applies only to the jurisdiction of the superior Courts. Unless the jurisdiction of a superior Court is expressly and clearly taken away, such jurisdiction will be presumed to continue. PROSAD DOSS MULLICK v. ROSSICK LALL MULLICK. The High Court subsequently transferred it to its own file. Held, that the suit was not one falling within the purview of s. 265 of the Contract Act; but, assuming that it was such a suit, and the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction, the High Court was nevertheless competent to transfer it. The matters in difference in the suit were eventually referred to arbitration under Ch. XXXVII of the Code of Civil Procedure, and an award was given declaring the plaintiff entitled to recover a certain sum from the defendant. Judgment and a decree were given in accordance with the award. Held, that the suit was not an application of the nature mentioned in s. 265 of the Contract Act, 1872, but a suit of the nature mentioned in s. 215 of the Civil Procedure Code, and was therefore not cognizable in the District Court, but in the Court of the Munsif. Prosad Doss Mullick v. *Russick Lall Mullick, I. Procedure, Act XIV of 1882, s. 213. A suit for winding up an expired partnership can be brought in the District Court under s. 265 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) and s. 213 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). But the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts is not annulled by the special jurisdiction assigned to the District Court by s. 265 of the Contract Act. Any one having a cause of action arising out of partnership transactions may sue the person liable in the ordinary Court. The jurisdiction of such Court, however, does not extend to the case of a winding up of an expired partnership. This jurisdiction is given to the District Court by s. 265 of the Contract Act, and when, along with a new mode of relief, particular jurisdiction is constituted to administer it, the Court specified, and no other, is to be understood as vested with authority. Hence, though administration for the purpose may apparently be sought in the subordinate Courts, it can be obtained in the case of an expired partnership, only in the District Court or the High Court. But the jurisdiction of the subordinate Courts in other respects is not extinguished. An apparent cause of action gives a right to sue in them for such relief as they can afford, though not for the particular kind of relief contemplated in s. 265 of the Contract Act. Where in a suit a cause of action appears which in itself is cognizable by an inferior Court, such a Court is not justified in rejecting the suit, merely because it is one in which the District Court might have jurisdiction under s. 265 of the Contract Act. Where an application under s. 265 of the Contract Act is presented to the District Court, that Court should determine whether it is (i) a mere case of administration, or (ii) of administration sought as a cloak for strictly litigious claims, or (iii) of administration plus claims involving litigation of the ordinary means. In the second case it may properly decline a function that properly belongs to an ordinary Court. In the last case it may either assume the administration of the estate of the firm, or decline to do so, according to circumstances, subject to appeal, and in the former case it may either itself deal with all questions arising between the ex-partners, or if these be of such a kind as to form separable subjects of adjudication, it can direct the party in each case interested to proceed on the particular alleged cause of action in the Court having ordinary jurisdiction, and itself use the result as an element of its administration. 11. ——— Jurisdiction of District Court—Jurisdiction of Subordinate Court—Practice. S. 265 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) assumes that there has been a partnership, and enables the District Court to wind it up, but does not deprive the ordinary Courts of their jurisdiction in cases seriously contested as to the existence of partnership. One of these parties accordingly sued others of them, on the allegation that his share of the property sold exceeded the lands occupied by him in the jote jumma, and asked the Court to give him a joint and several decree against all the defendants for the entire amount of the difference. Held, that plaintiff could not be entitled to such a decree, but should have asked that the defendants might be directed to contribute to him in proportion to their respective shares, if his complaint was well founded. But as defendant alleged that, although plaintiff held that small quantity, it was compensated for in other ways, it was for plaintiff to show that he did not derive from, or by virtue of his share in, the jote jumma a profit or interest equivalent to the interest he held in it. In special appeal it was contended, inter alia, that the principle of the decree was wrong, and that the defendants were liable only for that portion of the land of which they were in wrongful possession. Held, that, as in the original suit there was no plea that the lands were in the occupation of the answering defendants, in any other way than under their zamindari title, the only way in which the liabilities could be awarded was by making each party pay according to the shares they held in the parent zamindari. 8. ———— Rent-suit against recorded tenants—Co-owners, liability of, in a suit for contribution. All the co-owners of a talukh are jointly liable for the rent during the period over which their ownership extends, and although the landlord sues only the recorded tenants for the rent, this would not relieve the unrecorded tenants from the equitable liability of paying their share of the rent to those of the recorded tenants who are obliged to pay the whole. The fact that one of the co-owners (whose name is not recorded and who is not a party to the suit for rent) sold away his interest before the date of the suit, he having been a co-owner at the time the liability arose, would not relieve him of the liability, although he may not have derived any advantage from the payment made. 11. ———— Mesne profits—Decree—Shareholders—Assessment—Interest. The plaintiff's right to succeed in a suit for contribution in respect of a decree for mesne profits, under which all the parties to the suit were liable as judgment-debtors, depended on the amount of the share to which they were respectively entitled as share-holders in a certain estate, of a portion of which they had been wrongfully in possession from 1826 to 1854. Held, that the basis on which contribution should be estimated was the amount of the respective share of the parties at the date of the decree for mesne profits and not (as decided by the High Court) the amount of the shares, of which the parties were respectively in possession from 1826 to 1854. Some of the payments in execution of the decree had been made from the local Treasury, in which the money was held not on joint account, but on separate accounts to the credit of the several share-holders, and one of the parties contended that in assessing the contribution he should have been credited with a share of such money proportionate to the share, to which he was entitled in the estate. Held, that he was rightly credited only with the amount standing to his credit in the Treasury. Some of the parties contributed relatively more largely to the earlier payments under the decree and others to the latter payments. Held, that allowance should be made in the decree for this distinction. Each payment on account diminished the interest on the decretal amount and the benefit of that reduction of interest ought to go in relief of those, who made the payments, and not of those who continued in default. 12. ——— Decree for mesne profits—Shareholders in estate—Payments made by the various parties at various times on decree—Reciprocal rights and obligations towards each other on such payments—Calculation of interest on such portion of decree as from time to time remained unpaid—Adjustment of accounts so as to equalise rights and liabilities according to proportionate shares in estate. The appellants and respondent were jointly liable under a decree for mesne profits of a share in an estate, of which share they had for many years been in wrongful possession. On 3rd April 1882 the amount of the decree was finally ascertained as Rs. 85,795 with interest at 6 per cent. from 12th May 1879 until realization. The liability under the decree was finally extinguished by payments made at different times by the various parties extending down to 17th September 1889, during all which time interest was running on so much of the decreed amount as for the time being remain unsatisfied. In a suit for contribution between the parties, disputes arose as to their reciprocal rights and obligations towards each other, having regard to the amounts of their several contributions, the times at which they had been made, and the different proportions of their interests in the other shares in the estate itself; and when the suit came on appeal to the Privy Council those shares had been ascertained, but their Lordships remitted the suit to the High Court to retake certain accounts and give consequential relief thereon. Held, that what ought to be taken as the amount representing the total debt to be discharged was not the actual sum received by the decree-holder in satisfaction of the decree, viz., Rs. 1,25,826, nor a sum arrived at on the footing that the principal and interest had all been paid on the same day, viz., 17th September 1889, which amounted to Rs. 1,39,059; but an amount arrived at by crediting interest at the same rate on each amount paid in favour of the party on whose behalf it was paid, from the date of payment until the final satisfaction of the decree, viz., Rs. 1,48,873, and that sum was the amount, which was to be divided amongst the parties in proportion to their several interests in the property. The burden to be borne was made heavier to all by reason of the length of time over which the liquidation was protracted, while the rights of individuals were equalized by the allowance of interest on their contributions from the time they were made. The account should be taken on the above footing and the amounts of their several contributions set off against their several liabilities so adjusted. This having been in effect done by the High Court the appeal was dismissed. GURU PROSANNA LAHIRI v. JOTINDRA MOHAN LAHIRI (1907)

15. ——— Set off—Limitation. Where in a suit for contribution by a co-sharer for a certain sum of money paid on behalf of his other co-sharers to discharge a decree for rent obtained against them jointly, the latter (i.e., the defendants) claimed a set off on account of previous payments by them of similar decrees for the benefit of the plaintiff amongst others. Held, that no question of limitation arose as regards the claim for set off. The remedy might have been barred, but the right to the debt was not extinguished. Mohesh Lal v. Basani Kumari, I. L. R. 6 Calc. 340, referred to. GAJADHAR MAHTO v. RAGHUBAR GOPE (1907)

3. ——— Payment for arrears of rent by one of several co-tenants—Sureties. In a suit to recover contribution on the allegation that plaintiff and defendant were joint tenants, and that there was an arrear of rent due from them, for which the zamindar was about to sue when the plaintiff paid it, together with several other cesses and expenses : Held, that, as there had been no demand upon the defendant, nor any suit nor other effectual proceeding for the recovery of the rent, the payment by the plaintiff was voluntary and officious, and that, as the demand with which plaintiff complied was an excessive demand, his compliance with it would not bind the defendant to pay the amount of contribution sued for. Held, further, that the rules which govern Courts in England in matters of suretyship could not be applied to a case like this, where joint and several liability was not found as a fact, and where the sum alleged to be due was not certain, but contested. Thereupon the plaintiff sued the other two joint debtors for contribution, as she had repaid to her minor son the sum of money so taken away. Held, that the payment by the plaintiff to her minor son was a voluntary payment, and was not therefore such a payment as entitled her to sue her joint debtors for contribution. 6. ——— Suit for fees of Ameen deputed to make partition—Payment by one proprietor. A suit for contribution for the fees of an ameen who was deputed to make a batwara will lie against another proprietor of the estate who joined with the plaintiff in applying for the batwara and is not affected by the fact that the batwara was, for certain reasons, not carried out. The Collector having called upon the proprietors to pay the fees of the ameen, the plaintiff's payment of the whole amount was not a voluntary payment, as the Collector could have sold the whole estate to realize the fees. 7. ——— Payment of costs by one of representatives of judgment-debtor—Joint liability for Costs. Notwithstanding an order of the Privy Council that a certain sum should be paid to a judgment-debtor out of money deposited by the judgment-debtor in their treasury, the former took out execution against the property of the latter, who, having died in the meantime, was represented by plaintiffs and defendants. Certain property belonging to the deceased having been attached and advertised for sale, plaintiffs paid the costs due under the Privy Council decree, and then sued for contribution. Held, that defendants were liable for the sum paid in excess of plaintiff's share. 8. ——— Payment to stay sale—Suit for refund on ground of previous satisfaction of decree. A was in possession of certain lands in lieu of dower. B put up to sale, in execution of a decree against C (A's husband), C's rights and interest in those lands. A under protest deposited in Court the amount claimed in order to stop the sale, and consented that it should be paid over to B until the rights of the parties could be settled in a regular suit. A then sued B for a refund of the money on the ground that at the time of B's attaching the property his decree against C had been already satisfied. The Zilla Court gave a decree for A upon the merits. The High Court, on appeal, held that the payment into Court was a voluntary payment, and therefore A had no right of action against B. Held (reversing the decision of the High Court), that the payment was not a voluntary payment. 10. ——— Payment by dar-patnidar to stay sale—Liability of co-sharers in zamindari. Held, that plaintiff, who held partly as zamindar and partly as dar-patnidar, was entitled to look to his co-sharers in the zamindari for contribution of Government revenue paid by him to save the entire estate from sale, and that the fact of his being a sharer in the dar-patni could not bind him to recover his over-payments from the patnidars. 11. ——— Payment of revenue to save estate from sale—Suit against Co-sharers. Where a village was in arrear through the deficiency of a former lumberdar, and the plaintiff having purchased at auction the share of the lumberdar, and not his right and liabilities, had to pay the revenue to save the estate:—Held, that the plaintiff had a right to call upon his co-sharers to contribute their quota of Government revenue, the co-sharers' remedy being against the defaulting lumberdar. 12. ——— Payment to prevent foreclosure—Evidence of defendants' shares. In a suit by one of several shareholders in certain mortgaged property to recover contribution on account of payment made by plaintiff to save the property from being foreclosed, not the sudder jummas assessed on the villages to which the claim related, but the zamindar's collections, would be the better evidence of the relative values of the villages and the proportion payable by the defendants. 13. ——— Payment of revenue to stay sale—Liability of mortgagees of co-sharer in possession. The interests of a Hindu widow (R D) in certain estates having been mortgaged, the mortgagees in the course foreclosed the mortgage, and obtained a decree for possession. Intermediately, R D committed default in the payment of the Government revenue, and her share was paid in by her co-sharers, who brought a suit against R D to recover the amount, and obtained a decree. This decree proving infructuous, they brought the present suit against the mortgagees. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover against the defendants, who had completed their legal title to R D's share, and were entitled, had they chosen, to make the payment which she omitted to make. Held, that a suit for contribution is not founded upon implied promise or request; but that the obligation to pay rests on a different ground, viz., that in æquali jure the law requires equality. 14. ——— Payment to save from sale property attached under mortgage decree. D, having obtained a decree against his debtors, J, P, and others, took out execution and attached certain property which had been pledged by them as security. He then brought part of it to sale, exempting the share of P (which he purchased without notice to the other tenants) and realized his dues, J paying the amount in order to save the property from sale. J then sued P for contribution, and obtained a decree making her (P's) share liable, which he attached and put up for sale. D objected under Act VIII of 1859, s. 246, but his objection was disallowed, and he paid up P's contribution. He now sued to recover the amount so paid. Held, that D's claim was unjust, for when he was paid up by J, he was bound to give up his lien on P's share, which became vested in J. Accordingly, in buying that share he took it burdened with his own lien, and when J paid off the entire liability, he succeeded to the right of contribution from P by buying it from her share. If, therefore, D wished to retain that share, he was bound to make good P's defalcation. JEETRAM DUTT v. DOORGA DASS CHATTERJEE

16. ——— Payment by landlord—Landlord and tenant—Expenses of perfecting title. The plaintiffs were the registered holders of the village of Mankoli in the Ahmedabad Collectorate, for which they obtained a sanad in 1864 under Bombay Act VII of 1863. The defendants were the descendants of the original owners of the village, who, about 1768, finding themselves unable to meet the expenses attaching to the village, gave up their title to it to the ancestors of the plaintiffs on condition of retaining a third of the lands, rent-free as their wanta, or share, subject to no other condition but a house-tax. Held, that a settlement made by the plaintiffs without the defendants' consent was not binding on the latter, and any payment made by them to Government was a purely voluntary one, to which they could not ask the defendants to contribute. Also, assuming that the relationship of landlord and tenant did exist between the parties, a suit by the plaintiffs against the defendants would not lie for contribution to any expenses to which the plaintiffs as landlords might have been put in defending or perfecting their title. dar of a village in which the defendant held certain land as inamdar on the annual payment of a certain quit-rent. The plaintiff's jaghir was, in point of time, subsequent to the defendant's inam. Ever since the time of the jaghir, the ancestors of the defendant (and after them the defendant himself) paid the quit-rent to the ancestors of the plaintiff, and after them, to the plaintiff himself. In 1869 the summary settlement was introduced into the village under Bombay Act VII of 1863. Under s. 9 of that Act, a notice was served upon the plaintiff by the Collector in respect of the village, and he accepted the settlement provided in ss. 2 and 6 of the Act. Government, accordingly, granted the village to him at the summary settlement of two annas in the rupee of the full assessment. No notice was served upon the defendant under the Act, nor did the plaintiff inform the defendant of the notice which the plaintiff had received in respect of the village. The certificate issued by the Collector to the plaintiff previously to the grant of the sanad regarding the settlement, contained the following passage :— "Before the villages (Vesu and Sanya) were granted in jaghir, lands were held by peta-inamdars over which the jaghirdar has no right. They are entered in the sanad only for the purpose of receiving the settlement and paying it over to the Sarkar." In 1877 the plaintiff sued the defendant for the amount of three years' summary settlement which he (plaintiff) had paid to Government on account of the defendant's land. Held, that the defendant was not liable to pay, whether regarded as an independent inamdar holding directly under Government or as a tenant of the plaintiff. 18. ——— Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 132—Voluntary payment—Assessment—Payment by A of assessment due on B's land does not give A a Charge on such land—Contribution. The plaintiff filed this suit in 1901 to recover R30, which he had paid for the defendants in respect of yearly assessments due upon their land since the year 1891. Their land formed part of a larger holding which stood in one name in the revenue records, and the assessment on which the plaintiff paid. He now sued the defendants for contribution in respect of the assessment paid for their part of the holding, and contended that their land was charged with the amount so paid by him, and that the period of limitation applying to his claim was that prescribed in Art. 132 of Sch. II to the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Held, that the money paid by the plaintiff for the defendants did not become a charge on the defendants' land, and that Art. 132 of Sch. II to the Limitation Act did not apply. The mere fact that the plaintiff was obliged to pay the assessment for the defendants' land in order to save his own might, under the circumstances, give him a right to claim contribution ; but a charge is not incident to that

In the meantime the rent due to the zamindar had fallen into arrear, and the zamindar obtained a rent decree, and in execution thereof advertised the putni for sale. The mortgagee, to save the property, paid in the amount of the decree and afterwards sued the mortgagor for contribution. Held, that a mortgagee who purchases property at an execution sale is under a legal liability to pay the rent due upon the property at the time of purchase and therefore cannot claim, under s. 69 of the Contract Act, contribution from the mortgagor. Maharani Dasya v. *Harendra Lall Roy Chowdhry, 1 C. 20. ——— Second Appeal—Civil Procedure Code, s. 586—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 41—No second appeal where in suits for contribution debt in respect of which contribution is sought, is created by the payment itself—Appeal ability determined by subject-matter of suit and not by amount claimed in execution. The suits for contribution exempted from the jurisdiction of Courts of Small Causes by Sch. II, Act IX of 1887, are suits in which contribution is claimed in respect of payment made by a sharer of money due from a co-sharer. The exemption does not apply to cases where no debt was due from the co-sharer prior to payment, but contribution is sought in respect of a debt which became due only by virtue of such payment. In such cases no second appeal will lie under s. 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure if the subject-matter of the suit is less than R500. In determining whether second appeals lie in such cases in execution proceedings, the amount of subject-matter of the suit and not the amount sought to be recovered in execution must be taken into consideration. cover it by the sale of the portion of such estate purchased by the plaintiff. Having obtained a decree, the mortgagee caused a portion of such portion to be sold in the execution of the decree. In order to save the remainder of such portion from sale in the execution of the decree, the plaintiff satisfied the judgment-debt. The plaintiff then sued the defendants for contribution. Held, that assuming that the mortgagee, by not including the defendants in his suit upon the mortgage-bond, had put it out of his power to proceed at law by another suit on the basis of the same bond against the properties in the possession of the defendants as purchasers, it did not follow that the plaintiff's equitable right to recover a fair contribution from the defendants on the ground of his having paid the whole debt due to the mortgagee was thereby invalidated. 3. ——— Joint mortgage—Purchase of share in mortgage at sale in execution. T and D in May 1867 jointly mortgaged their respective two biswas shares of a certain village. In August 1877, the mortgagee sued to recover the mortgage-money by the sale of the mortgaged property, and obtained a decree. Before this decree was executed, L obtained a decree against D, in execution of which his two biswas share was put up for sale on the 20th June 1878 and was purchased by A. Subsequently the mortgagee applied for execution of his decree, and D's two biswas share was attached and advertised for sale in execution thereof. In order to save such share from sale, A, on the 29th June 1878, satisfied the mortgagee's decree. He then sued P, D's co-mortgagor, to recover half the amount he had so paid, by the sale of P's two biswas. Held, that, inasmuch as, when A discharged the whole amount of the mortgage-debt, he not only became entitled to a contribution of half such amount from P, but having acquired the rights of the mortgagee, was competent to assert a lien on P's two biswas share A was entitled to a decree as claimed, PANCHAM SINGH v. ALI AHMED . The suit was dismissed by the first Court, but on appeal the order was "Appeal decreed." A entered into a compromise with B, and entered satisfaction of a moiety of the decree. He afterwards issued execution of the other moiety against C, and compelled him to pay. C now sued B for recovery of the proportion of the amount paid by him to A, but which, according to the valuation of the respective properties, should have fallen into the share of B. Held, that the debt due upon the mortgage-bond was a general burden upon the two properties, for which no portion of those two properties was more liable than the other. Held, also, that, as between the plaintiff and defendant, the liability was not joint, but several, in proportion to the respective values of the properties, and that the plaintiff, having been compelled to pay money for which the property of the defendant was legally liable, was entitled to recover the amount from the defendant. The plaintiff in that suit obtained a decree, the claims of both sets of defendants being found to be unsupported, and the decree gave costs jointly against all the defendants. been recovered from one of two judgment-debtors against whom it was jointly passed, and he sues the other judgment-debtor for contribution, a primâ facie case is made by the production of the judgment and the certificate of satisfaction. That judgment is conclusive as between the judgment-debtors, in the sense that it will not be open to either of them to contend that the former suit should have been dismissed, or that one of the parties should not have been held liable to the decree-holder therein, or that the amount decreed was excessive or based on principles erroneous on the face of the judgment. But it will be open to the party from whom contribution is sought, without impugning the propriety of the judgment, to plead and establish that as between the joint debtors the plaintiff is solely liable for the debt, or that the defendant is not equally liable with the plaintiff, or that the suit is not maintainable by reason of the fact that the plaintiff and the defendant are joint tort-feasors in a sense in which, on public grounds, the right to claim contribution is negatived. And, though it may have been rightly held in the former suit that both judgment-debtors were jointly liable for the mesne profits of land for three years, it will still be open to the defendant in the suit for contribution to show that the plaintiff alone enjoyed those profits; and in that case the plaintiff will not be entitled to contribution. Quœre: Whether the principle laid down in Merryweather v. Nixon, *8 T. Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 61, 99, 132. Where one of two or more co-sharers owning an estate subject to the payment of revenue to the Government pays the whole revenue in order to save, and so does save, the estate from liability to be sold by the Government for realizing the arrears of revenue, he is by operation of law entitled to a charge upon the share of each of his co-sharers for the realization of the latter's share of the revenue, as between the co-sharers. Seshagiri v. Pichu, *I. II to the Limitation Act, in so far as it related to the enforcement of a charge. Assuming that the plaintiff had no charge on the defendant's share of the estate, the Article applicable would be Art. 61 or Art. 99, but not Art. 120. Though a claim for contribution generally arises in cases where the party seeking contribution has himself paid the amount in respect of which contribution is sought, and though, in the present case, the arrear of revenue had not been paid to the Government by the plaintiff, but had been realized by the Collector under the Revenue Recovery Act from the income of the plaintiff's share after it had been registered as a separate estate, plaintiff's right to claim contribution was not affected. Nor did that fact affect the application of Art. 99 or Art. 61 of Sch. II to the Limitation Act, in both of which the person bringing the suit is referred to as having "paid" the amount sought to be recovered. In such a case, it is but just that all should contribute in proportion towards a benefit claimed by all. It is immaterial whether the party seeking contribution made the payment voluntarily or involuntarily, namely, by payment to avert coercive process against his property or by the seizure of his property under process of law for realization of the amount. In either case he has been damnified, and the parties against whom he seeks contribution have been benefited to that extent. RAJAH OF VIZIANAGRAM v. SETRUCHERLA SOMASEKHARARAZ (1903)

The zamindar thereupon brought a suit against them to have his right to measure declared, and obtained a joint decree with costs. 3. ——— Wrong-doers with intention—Bonâ fide exercise of right. The question as to whether as between persons against whom a joint decree has been passed there is any right of contribution at all, depends upon the question whether the defendants in the former suit were wrong-doers in the sense that they knew, or ought to have known, that they were doing an illegal or wrongful act. In that case no suit for contribution will lie. If the defendants in the former suit were not guilty of wrong in that sense, but acted under a bonâ fide claim of right, and had reason to suppose that they had a right to do what they did, then they may have a right of contribution inter se; and in such case the Court should enquire what share they each took in the transaction; because, according to circumstances, one or more of them might be excused altogether or in part, from contributing,—as, for instance, one of them might have acted as a servant, and by the command of the others; or the others might have been the only persons benefited by the wrongful act; in which case those who were benefited, or who ordered, the servant to do the act would not be entitled to contribution. S. 22 of Act XV of 1877 does not apply to a case in which the persons to whom a right of suit is assigned after the institution of the suit, obtain leave to carry on the suit. 4. ——— Unintentional wrong-doer—Ignorance of illegal act. An objection to the attachment and sale of certain immoveable property raised by one who claimed to have purchased the same at a sale in execution of a prior decree was disallowed on the ground that under the prior decree, the rights of one only of the present judgment-debtors had been sold and purchased by the objector. In accordance with this order, two-thirds of the property under attachment were sold, and the objector thereupon brought a regular suit for a declaration of his right as a purchaser of the whole property in execution of the prior decree. To this suit he impleaded as defendants the decree holder and the judgment-debtors. The suit was decreed, and in the result the decree-holder alone was compelled to pay the whole of the costs. Subsequently he brought a suit for contribution in respect of these costs, making defendant to the suit (i) R, one of his co-defendants in the previous suit, personally and as heir of A who was another of those co-defendants, (ii) N and (iii) S, these two being sued in the character of heirs of A. Held, that, inasmuch as the rule preventing one wrong-doer from claiming contribution against another was confined to cases where the person seeking relief must be presumed to have known that he was acting illegally, and in this case there was no evidence to show that the plaintiff in attaching and advertisfng the property for sale in execution of his decree knew he was doing an illegal act, but the inferences were all the other way, he was fully entitled in law to maintain the suit and to recover from the defendants the proportionate amount of the costs which he had to pay for them. Merry-weather v. Nixon, *2 Sm, L. The decree for costs was executed against B and satisfied by him; he now sued the son of A (deceased) to recover the amount paid by him. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the claim not being barred by the rule against contribution between joint tort-feasors. That suit was decreed with costs, the whole of which were realised from G. In a suit for contribution brought by G against S and A, the lower Appellate Court found that G, S, and A had conspired in setting up a false defence in the former suit in order to defeat P's claim. Held, in second appeal, that, assuming such collusion were proved, the suit for contribution was not maintainable, G, S, and A being joint wrong-doers. Vayangara Vadaka Vittil Manja v. *Pariyangot Padingara Kuruppath Kadugochen Nayar, I. But if they were not guilty of wrong in that sense,, but acted under a bonâ fide claim of right, and had reason to suppose that they had a right to do what they did, then there is a right of contribution inter se. Some time in 1826, R, the common ancestor of the parties, dispossessed K of a share in a certain property; after an interval of 27 years and 6 months K brought a suit and proved his right and recovered possession; meanwhile, i.e., 5 years after the dispossession, R had died and had been succeeded by his sons. Subsequently to the institution of such prior suit defendants (i) cut and removed certain standing trees, and (ii) removed the logs which lay stored on the ground. Upon plaintiff bringing a second suit to recover damages on both grounds, objection was raised as to the logs that a claim for their value might have been included in the former suit, since their conversion was effected when the plaintiff was dispossessed of the land upon which they lay, and that, under s. 43, no claim could now be made in respect of them. Held, that a trespass on a piece of land is by itself no proof of any conversion of moveables lying upon the land at the time that the trespass takes place; that notwithstanding plaintiff's eviction from the land, possession of the timber lying stored upon it should be presumed to have continued in him in the absence of proof of any act on the part of the defendant with special reference to such timber and showing unequivocally that the plaintiff was entirely deprived of the use of them; and that conversion of the logs was not effected by the trespass, but only by their removal subsequently to the institution of the previous suit. 1. ——— Hindu Convert to Christianity—Law governing converts—Hindu law. Upon the conversion of a Hindu to Christianity, the Hindu law ceases to have any continuing obligatory force upon the convert. He may renounce the old law by which he was bound, as he has renounced the old religion, or, if he thinks fit, he may abide by the old law, notwithstanding he has renounced the old religion. The profession of Christianity releases the convert from the trammels of Hindu law, but it does not of necessity involve any change of the rights or relations of the convert in matters with which Christianity has no concern, such as his rights and interest in, and his powers over, property. The convert, though not bound as to such matters, either by the Hindu law or by any positive law, may, by his course of conduct after his conversion, have shown by what law he intended to be governed as to these matters. 2. ——— Law governing Converts—Succession Act, s. 331. Native Christians are governed by the Succession Act, but if a family of native Christians continued to observe the Hindu law of succession until the Succession Act altered their rule of succession, the members of the family born before the Succession Act came into operation could not be deprived of the rights acquired by them under Hindu law. 3. ——— Marriage, validity of—Succession to estate of Hindu who has become a Christian—Succession Act, s. 35. If a Hindu becomes a convert to Christianity and dies intestate, succession to his estate is governed by the Indian Succession Act, 1865. A K, a Brahman, went through a Hindu marriage ceremony with S, a Brahman girl of eight years of age, in 1850. The marriage was never consummated nor was the consummation ceremony performed. In 1851 A K was converted to Christianity. S refused to live with him because he was an outcaste, and in 1857 S renounced all claims on him or his estate. In 1858 A K went through a Christian form of marriage with M. In 1881 A K died intestate, and possession was taken of his estate by the Administrator-General. S claimed the estate from the Administrator-General. Her suit was dismissed on the ground that A K having died an outcaste and degraded, and his degradation not atoned for under Hindu law, no right of inheritance remained to her. Before judgment was delivered, S died, and the suit abated. In a suit filed by the Administrator-General to have the estate administered by the Court, the claimants were (i) the father of A K, (ii) the brother of A K undivided, from his father, and (iii) the executor of M. Held, that S was the wife of A K when he went through the form of marriage with M, and that, but for the fact that had relinquished her rights, S would have been entitled on the death of A K to such portion of his estate as the law assigned to her as his widow. Held, also, that under s. 35 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, the father of A K was entitled to the whole of the estate. 8. ——— Converts from Hindu to Mahomedan religion—Custom as to inheritance. The general presumption arising from the intimate connection between law and religion in the Mahomedan faith is that the Mahomedan law governs converts from the Hindu religion to Mahomedanism. But a well-established custom in the case of such converts to follow their old Hindu law of inheritance would override that general presumption, and a usage establishing a special rule of inheritance as regards a special kind of property would be given the force of law, even though it be at variance with both Hindu and Mahomedan laws. 9. ——— Suni Borah Mahomedans—Conversion, effect of—Hindu converts to Mahomedanism, custom and usage of—Inheritance among such converts—Native Christians—Law applied to Native Christians prior to Indian Succession Act (X of 1865)—Burden of proof. The Suni Borah Mahomedan community of the Dhandhuka Taluka in Gujarat are governed by the Hindu law in matters of succession and inheritance. Held, therefore, that in this community a widow is entitled to succeed to her husband's estate to the exclusion of a daughter or a step-daughter. As to the law governing Hindu converts to Mahomedanism, the following principles may now be regarded as settled :—(i) Mahomedan law generally governs converts to that faith from Hinduism ; but (ii) a well-established custom of such converts following the Hindu law of inheritance would override the general presumption. (iii) This custom should be confined strictly to cases of succession and inheritance. (iv) If any particular custom of succession be alleged which is at variance with the general law applicable to these communities, the burden of proof lies on the party alleging such special custom. If evidence is given as to the general prevalence of Hindu rules of succession in a Mahomedan community in preference to the rules of Mahomedan law, the burden of proof is discharged, and it then rests with the party disputing the particular Hindu usage in question to show that it is excluded from the sphere of the proved general usage of the community. Among native Christians, certain classes strictly retain the old Hindu usages, others retain these usages in a modified form, and others again wholly abandon them. Before the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), the Christian convert could elect to attach himself to any one of these particular classes, and he would be governed by the usage of the class to which he so attached himself. Abraham v. *Abraham; 9 Moo. 11. ——— Hindus becoming Mahomedans—Hindu law—Joint Hindu family—Effect of conversion of member of Joint Hindu family to Mahomedanism—Regulation VII of 1832, s. 9—Compromise—Title taken under compromise between persons having mutually exclusive claims. In the year 1845 one Ratan Singh, who at that time formed with his son Daulat Singh a joint Hindu family, possessed as such of considerable property, both moveable and immoveable, became converted to Mahomedanism. In 1851 Ratan Singh died, his son Daulat Singh having predeceased him and such portion of the property as was situate in British India was taken over by the Court of Wards, and held by them apparently on behalf of Raj Kunwar, the widow of Ratan Singh, and Sen Kunwar, the widow of Daulat Singh (these two ladies being at that time detained in Lucknow under the supervision of the officials of the King of Oudh), without any recognition of either widow having a title superior to that of the other. In 1857 Sen Kunwar executed a bond for a considerable sum of money in favour of Jai Chand, the father-in-law of her daughter, Mewa Kunwar. Sen Kunwar died in 1857, and Raj Kunwar in 1858. After the death of these ladies, three claimants to the property appeared, namely, Chatar Kunwar and Mewa Kunwar, the daughters of Daulat Singh, and Khairati Lal, the son of a daughter of Ratan Singh who had predeceased her father. The matters in dispute between these claimants were settled by means of compromise, in virtue of which 8½ annas of the property were assigned to the daughters of Daulat Singh and 7½ annas to Khairati Lal, and in 1861 the partition of the property in accordance with the terms of the compromise was completed. In 1866 Chatar Kunwar died, and upon her death Mewa Kun-

war successfully asserted her right by survivorship to the 4¼ annas which had been the share of her sister, and thus became possessed of the whole 8½ annas assigned by the compromise mentioned above to the daughters of Daulat Singh. Meanwhile, however, Jai Chand had brought a suit upon the bond given to him in 1857 by Sen Kunwar. Why this bond was originally executed did not appear, nor that there was evidence of any such legal necessity pressing upon Sen Kunwar as would have supported an incumbrance of more than her own life-interest in the property. The final decree in this suit was obtained by Jai Chand in 1868, that is to say, after the surviving defendant, Mewa Kunwar, had been declared entitled to the entire 8½ annas share, and it was a decree based upon a confession of judgment by Mewa Kunwar. In satisfaction of this decree certain villages part of the said 8½ anna share, were made over to the decree-holder, some of which, in turn, were sold by him to various vendees. On suit by the sons of Mewa Kunwar to recover some of these villages on the ground that their mother had in them no more than a Hindu daughter's life estate, which had come to an end on her death in 1899, it was held, that Ratan Singh by his conversion to Mahomedanism became, according to Hindu law, civilly dead, and the whole of the property of the former joint Hindu family became vested in Daulat Singh in 1845, the provisions of s. 9 of Regulation VII of 1832 embodying merely a rule of procedure and not a rule of substantive law, and no suit claiming the family property having been brought by Daulat Singh to which the rule of procedure therein laid down could be applied; that in any case the conversion of Ratan Singh worked a separation of the joint Hindu family, and one half of the property became vested in Daulat Singh, though it might not have been actually partitioned; that the property so becoming vested in Daulat Singh would be held by him as a separated Hindu; that the property was held by the Court of Wards during the lives of Raj Kunwar and Sen Kunwar, not specifically for either of them, but for the benefit of the rightful owner, both ladies being incapable of managing their affairs; that, after the compromise arrived at between Chatar Kunwar and Mewa Kunwar on the one side and Khairati Lal on the other, the estate which Chatar Kunwar and Mewa Kunwar took was a Hindu daughter's estate merely, and not an absolute estate, and that inasmuch as no legal necessity was shown for the making of Sen Kunwar's bond or for the relinquishment by Mewa Kunwar of the villages which she made over to Jai Chand in satisfaction of his decree upon that bond, the estate taken by Jai Chand could not be more than that possessed by Mewa Kunwar, and on her death her sons were entitled to recover possession. Abraham v. Abraham, 9 Moo I. A. 199, 237, referred to. Held, also, that, although the findings in the case between Mewa Kunwar and her brother-in-law (N. W. P. H. C. Reps., 1868, p. 82) could not be held to be res judicata in the present appeal, the judgment in that case could be used as evidence to the extent pointed out in the case of

2. ——— Annotated edition of an ancient religious work—Originality—Colourable imitation—Injunction—Damages — Account —Act XX of 1847, s. 12. The plaintiff, a bookseller, in 1884 brought out a new and annotated edition of a certain well-known Sanskrit work on religious observances, entitled "Vrtraj," having for that purpose obtained the assistance of Pundits who re-cast and re-arranged the work, introduced various passages from other old Sanskrit books on the same subject, and added foot-notes. In 1885 the plaintiff registered the copyright of this work. In 1886 the defendants printed and published an edition of the same work, the text of which was identical with that of the plaintiff's work, which moreover contained the same additional passages and the same foot-notes, at the same places with many slight differences. Held, that the plaintiff's work was such a new arrangement of old matter as to be an original work and entitled to protection, and that, as the defendants had not gone to independent sources for their material, but had pirated the plaintiff's work, they must be restrained by injunction. Held, also, that an account of the net profits made by the defendants by the sale of the plaintiff's book could be ordered, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 12 of Act XX of 1847, as the result of the account would be to give to the plaintiff what he could have claimed as damages under that section. 4. ——— Translations—Jurisdiction—Cause of action—Stat. 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45—Act XX of 1847, s. 8—Order for books sent from Bombay to Delhi—Registration of copyright—Notice of disputed proprietorship. The plaintiffs were publishers in London. The defendant carried on a printing and publishing business at Delhi. Between the years 1869 and 1891, the defendant translated certain English works (e.g., Todhunter's Mensuration, Barnard Smith's Algebra, etc.), into the Urdu language for the use of native students, and sold and distributed copies of such translations in various parts of India. The plaintiffs alleged that they were the proprietors of the copyright in the said books, and they sued in Bombay for a declaration of their ownership, and that the said books printed and sold by the defendant were an infringement of the said copyright and for an injunction, etc. It appeared that in June 1894 the plaintiffs' agent, who was then in India, instructed the Bombay firm of S to order copies of the said translations from the defendant. A letter was accordingly sent by S to the defendant at Delhi requesting him to send the books to Bombay by value-payable post, which the defendant did, and he received payment for them from the post office at Delhi. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the High Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction, and he denied that he had infringed the plaintiffs' copyright. Held, that no part of the plaintiffs' cause of action arose in Bombay, and that the High Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction. The act of S in paying for and receiving the goods formed no part of the defendant's offence, which was completed when he posted the books at Delhi. The English Copyright Act (Stat. 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45) extends to all parts of India. Having regard to s. 15 of that Act, it is clear that a person who infringes copyright must be sued, if he offends in India, not only within the limits of that country, but also in that part of India in which the offence has been committed. See also s. 13 of the Indian Act XX of 1847. Held, also, that translations are not copies, and that the defendant, by translating the books, had not infringed the plaintiffs' copyright. The plaintiffs had registered themselves as the proprietors of the copyright of the books in question both in London and in India. The defendant had not given notice of his intention to dispute the plaintiffs' copyright as required by s. 8 of Act XX of 1847. Held, that the plaintiffs' copyright in the book had been established. 5. ——— Form of Registration—"Selection" of poems, copyright in—Infringement of copyright by publication of copy before registration—Assignments of copyright previous to registration—Limitation of suits for infringement of copyright—Stat. 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45. The plaintiffs, the partners of a firm M & Co., were the proprietors registered under 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45, of the copyright of a selection of songs and poems, composed by numerous well-known authors, which was prepared by one P, and originally published in 1861. Since the original publication, the book ran through several editions, one of which was published in the year 1882. The book was registered under the provisions of the above statute on the 8th February 1889, the name of both the publisher and proprietor being entered in the register as M & Co., the firm's address being given, and the date of the first publication was entered as the 19th July 1861. The poems contained in the book were arranged by P, not in chronological order of their production, but in gradation of feeling and subject, and at the end of the book were given some notes, critical and explanatory. On the 15th January 1889 the defendant published, at Calcutta, a book containing the same selection of poems and songs as was contained in P's book. The arrangement, however, of the defendant's book differed from P's in that the poems of each author were placed together and in order of their composition. In one of the poems the defendant printed forty lines, which were contained in the work by the original author, but which were omitted by P, and in another poem one line. In many places there were differences of reading in the two books and in more of punctuation. In the defendant's book some of the titles to the poems, which had been assigned thereto by P and not by the original authors, appeared as well as good many of P's notes, some with acknowledgment and some without. With each poem the defendant gave a mass of notes, critical and explanatory, and he also prefixed to the poems of each author a biographical notice. The suit was instituted on the 27th February 1890, and the plaintiffs complained that the publication of defendant's book constituted a breach of their copyright, and prayed for the usual relief by way of injunction and damages. They contended that although the copyright in the works of the original authors had long lapsed, they were entitled to the copyright in the "selection" made by P. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that there could be no copyright in such a selection; that if any existed, the defendant's book did not infringe it; that the plaintiffs' book being registered as first published in 1861 and the infringement charged being in respect of the edition of 1882, and there being no evidence to show that the same selection was contained in the latter as in the former edition, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the relief prayed for; that the author of the plaintiffs' book being P, in whom the copyright would primâ facie be, and the property being registered as in the plaintiffs' firm, the registry was bad, as the assignment of the copyright to the plaintiffs was not shown; that the registration was also bad, as the entry merely contained the name and address of the plaintiffs' firm, and not the individual names and addresses of the partners of the firm; that the publication of the defendant's book having been before the date of registration, the suit would not lie; and that the suit was barred by the special limitation provided by s. 26 of the Stat. 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45. Held, that such "a selection" could be the subject-matter of copyright, the true principle applicable to such cases being that one person is not at liberty to use or avail himself of the labour which another has been at for the purpose of producing his work, and so take away the result of the other's labour, or in other words his property. Held, further, that the defendant's book constituted a piracy of the plaintiffs' book, and had infringed their copyright, and that they were entitled to the relief they sought. Held, also, that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it was reasonable to assume that successive issues of a book of this kind under the same name are substantially the same book; that it was unnecessary that the registry should show an assignment of the copyright by P to the plaintiffs: Weldon v. Dicks, L. R. 10 Ch. D. 247, followed; that the registration was not bad by reason of the names and addresses of the partners of the firm not being given: Low v. Routledge, 33 L. J. Ch. 717, and Weldon v. Dicks, L. R. 10 Ch. D. 247, followed; that the title to copyright is complete before registration, which is only a condition precedent to the right to sue, and that the plaintiffs had not therefore lost their right of action by reason of the defendant's book being published before theirs was registered: Tuck v. Priester, L. R. 19 Q. B. D. 629, and Gourband v. Wallace, 25 W. R. 604: All. W. N. (1877) 130, followed; and that, assuming that the rule of limitation provided by s. 26 of the Statute was applicable in this country, the suit was not barred by limitation: Hogg v. *Scott, L. CO-SHARER—contd.

1. GENERAL RIGHTS IN JOINT PROPERTY.

1. ——— Right of co-sharers—Tenants of co-sharers. The right of a sharer in a joint estate is a right of common enjoyment of the lands and premises, together with the tenants of the co-sharers, in like manner as the co-sharers themselves would have it. HULODHUR SEN v. GOOROO DAS ROY 20 W. R. 126

2. ——— Occupation by co-sharers of separate portions of estate. The legal position of co-sharers in an estate occupying separate portions in it is that each possesses and holds, in respect of his several right, to enjoy that which is his own. If one holds a portion larger than his share, the inequality may be rectified by a partition, or if a dispute arise on a division of the annual profits, it may be adjusted in a suit for an account. KALEE PERSHAD v. LUTAFUT HOSSEIN 12 W. R. 418

3. ——— Use of property by co-sharers or tenants-in-common. A Court of Equity will not interfere where a tenant-in-common acts reasonably for the purpose of enjoying the property held in common in any way in which an owner can enjoy such property without injury to his co-parcener, but the case is different where there has been a direct infringement of a clear and distinct right. GOPEE KISHEN GOSSAIN v. HEM CHUNDER GOSSAIN . . . . . 13 W. R. 322

4. ——— Manager of Khoti-Tenure—Right of manager to abandon rights without consent of co-sharers. In the absence of evidence of custom rendering the act of one sharer in a khotship (which act involved the sacrifice of important rights) binding upon his co-sharers, a managing khot has, without the assent of his co-sharers, no power to give up rights which belong to them as well as himself. COLLECTOR OF RATNAGIRI v. VYANKATRAV NARAYAN SURVE 8 Bom. A. C. 1

5. ——— Sale by some co-sharers—Authority to sell—Debt due by all the co-sharers. The mere circumstance of the existence of a debt due from all the co-sharers is by no means of itself enough to confer authority on some of several co-sharers to dispose of the other share. MAHOMED FAIZ ALI KHAN v. GUNGA RAM . 1 Agra 112

6. ——— Collection of rent in various kinds for joint tenure—Sharer in ijmali Julkur. The sharer of an ijmali julkur is not debarred from collecting his separate julkur jumma if he legally can do so, simply because it suits the purpose of another sharer to receive, in lieu of such a jumma, a consolidated chitti jumma. KASHEE NATH DHUR v. GUDADHUR PAL . 11 W. R. 374

7. ——— Consent to commutation of rent—Want of consent of all sharers. When a tenant applied for commutation of rent paid in kind, one of three lumberdars was held entitled to insist upon the adjudication on the amount of the rate as directed by law; and the consent of two other lumberdars to accept a lower rate of rent cannot debar this right. ROOPA v. SAHIB SINGH

1 Agra Rev. 58

8. ——— Rights and limitation of rights of joint owners of property—Alteration of incidents of property. It is not competent for owners of property in this country, by any arrangement made in their own discretion, to alter the ordinary incidents of the property which they possess ; a joint property, therefore, cannot be made impartible in perpetuity by any such arrangement, though the owners may, for sufficient consideration, bind themselves to forego their rights for a specified time and definite purpose by a contract which could be enforced against them personally. RADHANATH MUKERJEE v. TARRUCKNATH MUKERJEE
3 C. W. N. 126

9. ——— Separate payment of share of rent. A co-sharer in an under-tenure cannot claim separate payment of his share of the rent without the written consent of the zamindar ; and if the zamindar refuses to make a division of the property, application should be made to the Collector under s. 27, Act X of 1859. ISSUR CHUNDER GHOSAL v. MOOKTORAM PANDA . . . 9 W. R. 606

10. ——— Receipts of rent by co-sharers—Accounts—Limitation. Where persons jointly interested in an estate arranged that the rents should be received by an agent, and they themselves sometimes collected direct from the tenants, such collection being treated as a receipt by the agent or by some one on his behalf, and not as a collection antagonistic to the rights of the other joint tenants, the law of limitation is no bar to taking the back accounts. Where one tenant-in-common receives rents and then relinquishes his interest in the estate to another, that other is not answerable to the third tenant-in-common for any claim he may have against the first for having received more than his share. 11. ——— Right of one co-sharer to receive rent—Irregular appointment of lumberdar by Collector—Right of tenant to pay his entire rent to individual co-sharer and of co-sharer to receive it—N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 65—Custom. Held, that where the Collector of a district appointed by order one of two co-sharers in a mehal to be lumberdar and directed the tenants to pay rent to her, no lumberdar having been appointed at the settlement of the mehal or at any time by agreement between the co-sharers, such appointment by the Collector did not empower the lumberdar, so appointed, to collect the rents of the tenants. Held, also, that, in the absence of either an arrangement recorded at the settlement under s. 65 of Act XIX of 1873 or a local custom or special contract, one of several co-sharers in a mehal

13. ——— Measurement of land, right to—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 38—Fractional proprietor—Parties. A part proprietor of an estate is competent, under s. 38 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, to apply for measurement of its lands after making the remaining proprietors parties to the proceedings. ABDOOL HOSSEIN v. LALL CHAND MAHTON
I. L. R. 10 Calc. 36 : 13 C. L. R. 323

14. ——— Liability for repairs of tank by zamindar—Joint and several liability—Proportionate liability. A zamindar had expended certain sums at the defendants' request to repair a tank for the irrigation of lands held by them in common with him. In a suit brought to recover the sums so expended, it was contended that the receiver could only sue the defendants severally for their proportionate shares of the sum claimed. Held, that the defendants were jointly and severally liable for the sum sued for. SUNDARAM v. SANKARA
I. L. R. 9 Mad. 334

15. ——— Purchaser of rights of one of several co-sharers—Collections of rent. A party who purchases the rights of one of a number of co-sharers comes into all arrangements made in respect to the collections ; any express consent by him is not necessary for the payment of his share of the rent to any one else. RAM NATH SINGH v. GONDEE SINGH . . . 10 W. R. 441

16. ——— Purchaser of a share in a joint tenure—Severance of tenure by sale of share—Appointment of rent—Parties. A sale of a share in a tenure, let out to a tenant in its entirety, does not of itself necessarily effect a severance of the tenure or an apportionment of the rent ; but if a purchaser of the share desires to have such a severance, he is entitled to enforce it. If he takes no steps for that purpose, then the tenant is justified in paying the entire rent to all the parties jointly entitled to it. But if the purchaser desires to effect a severance of the tenure and an apportionment of the rent, he must give the tenant due notice to that effect, and then if the parties cannot agree to an apportionment, the purchaser may sue the tenant for the purpose of having the rent apportioned, making all the other co-sharers parties to the suit. It is impossible upon principle to distinguish cases where a tenure is sold privately from those where it is sold by public auction, or, on the other hand, to distinguish cases where a tenure is severed by different

Whilst her share was under attachment, B stopped paying the Government revenue, whereupon the plaintiff, a co-sharer in the estate, paid the whole revenue in order to save the mehal from sale. In a suit brought against A and B for recovery of the sum paid by the plaintiff on behalf of B's share:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the sum so paid declared to be a charge upon the share of B, which had been transferred to A, but not to a personal decree against A. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), ss. 146, 148—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Salvage, Maritime Civil, principle of—Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property Act), s. 100.* A co-sharer in a mehal, who was also the lumberdar, paid arrears of Government revenue for the years 1882, 1883, and part of 1884, in respect of certain lands in the mehal which were the exclusive property of another co-sharer. These lands were subject to simple mortgages executed in 1873, upon which decrees were obtained in 1884, and had been sold in execution of these decrees in 1887. The co-sharer lumberdar, having obtained a decree in a Court of revenue against the mortgagors under

s. 93 (g) of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881) for recovery of the arrears of revenue paid by him, sought to execute that decree under s. 177 of the Act by sale of the lands which had been sold in 1887; and thereupon the auction-purchaser at that sale objected under s. 178, and the objection having been overruled, brought a suit, as authorized by s. 181, in a Civil Court to establish his title to the lands and to have them protected from sale in execution of the Court of Revenue decree. This suit was decreed, and the decree, not having been appealed against, became final. Subsequently, the co-sharer lumberdar brought a suit in the Civil Court, in which he claimed a decree for enforcement of lien by sale of the land for the amount of the Court of Revenue decree, and for a declaration that the said lien, "which is on account of Government," be declared preferential to the mortgages of 1873, the decrees thereon of 1884, and the sales under those decrees of 1887. He claimed this lien not only in respect of the arrears of Government revenue paid, but also in respect of future interest. Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting).—(i) That the Legislature had not given or recognized in the North-Western Provinces any such right of charge or lien in favour of a person paying Government revenue as was claimed here, or provided any means by which such a charge could be enforced, and that any such charge would be at variance with the policy and intention of the Government as disclosed in its legislative enactments. (ii) That no Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and no Court of revenue had jurisdiction to make a decree for sale of the immoveable property or a decree in execution of which the immoveable property could be sold to the prejudice of incumbrances to which it was subject. (iii) That it was not the intention of the Legislature that a Civil Court should have jurisdiction to invest, by declaration or otherwise, a decree of a Court of revenue with the attributes of a decree for sale such as could be passed by a Civil Court in a suit for sale under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. (iv) That there is no general principle of equity to the effect that whoever having an interest in an estate makes a payment in order to save the estate obtains a charge on the estate; and therefore, in the absence of a statutory enactment, a co-sharer who paid the whole revenue and thus saved the estate does not, by reason of such payment, acquire a charge on the share of his defaulting co-sharer. Kinu Ram Das v. Mozaffer Hosain Shaha, I. L. R. 14 Calc. 809, approved. (v) That the principle of Maritime Civil Salvage had no application to the case, and that no analogy could exist between the case of a salvor in Maritime Civil Salvage and the case of a co-sharer in a mehal to whom s. 146 or s. 148 of the North-Western Provinces Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873) applied. Leslie v. French, *L. In execution of that decree, he attached and sold certain land in which all the members of the defendants' family were interested. At the sale he purchased the land himself and was put into possession. In 1873 he began to pay the assessment upon the whole property. Subsequent litigation took place between him and the defendants' family, pending which the plaintiff separated from his uncle and obtained the property in question as his share. The result of that litigation was a decree by the High Court, on the 23rd September 1879, declaring that the plaintiff's uncle was only entitled to the interest of the five members of the family who had been defendants in his suit (No. 176 of 1868) in execution of the decree in which the property had been sold. The plaintiff brought the present suit in 1883 against the other members of the family to recover their proportionate share of the assessment for the years 1875—1878, during which period he had paid the whole assessment. He prayed for a sale of their interest in the land. Both the lower Courts held that the payment of assessment did not create a charge on the property, and that the plaintiff having omitted to sue within three years from the date of the payment made by him, the present suit was barred. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court :—Held, confirming the lower Court's decree, that the suit was barred. The plaintiff paid the assessment as full owner of the property, and it was entirely by his own action that the defendants had been excluded from the property and did not pay their quotas of the assessment. Under those circumstances, the payments could be regarded as salvage payments so as to make them a charge, according to equity, justice, and good conscience upon the shares of the other co-owners. ACHUT RAMCHANDRA PAL v. HARI KAMTI . . I. L. R. 11 Bom. 313

23. ——— Joint ownership—Use of joint property as between co-owners—Rights amongst themselves of co-sharers of joint property where there is a profitable use by one of them without others being excluded—Ferry worked by one of the co-owners of land. Property does not cease to be joint merely because it is used so as to produce more profit to one of the joint owners, who has incurred expenditure for that purpose, than to the others, where the latter are not excluded. Joint property being used consistently with the continuance of the joint ownership and possession, without exclusion of the co-sharers who do not join in the work, there is no encroachment on the rights of any of them, as regards common enjoyment, so as to give ground for a suit. The defendant, a co-sharer in village lands, without claiming to restrain competition, acted upon the right that a ferry may be established in India by a person on his own property taking toll from strangers, and that he may acquire such a right, by grant or user, over the property of others, whether a co-sharer with them or not. He used property that he owned jointly with the plaintiffs, his co-sharers, excluding none of them. As no grant was ever made to him, he could only have set up an exclusive right by showing that he had either dispossessed them, or had had adverse possession for twelve years, or that he had used the ferry for twelve years as of right. The question, however, of any exclusive right in the defendant had not arisen. For the parties being co-owners, the defendant had made use of the joint property in a way quite consistent with the continuance of the joint ownership and joint possession. Watson & Co. v. *Ramchand Dutt, I. The other co-sharer remained entitled to claim that this possession was held partly for him. The present suit was brought upon two agreements, purporting to have been made in 1870, between the two co-sharers, while proceedings to obtain the above decrees were pending, to the effect that, whereas both had claims against the talukhdar, one only was to sue him, the other paying half of the costs and being entitled to receive half of what might be decreed. The Judicial Committee, upon the evidence, concluded that the Appellate Court, attributing too much to certain omissions and acts on the plaintiff's part, which were more or less explained, had erred in

And it is a general rule—a rule not derived from the Bengal Tenancy Act, but from the general principles of legal procedure, that a sharer, whose co-sharers refuse to join him as plaintiffs, can bring them into the suit as defendants and sue for the whole rent of the tenure. S. 188 of the Act does not preclude such a suit ; the filing of a suit not being a thing, which the landlord is, under the Act "required or authorized to do," but an application to the Court against an alleged grievance which the plaintiff is entitled to submit, not by reason of any provision in the Tenancy Act, but under the general law. Although an agreement expressly proved or implied by the conduct of the parties, for the payment of rent to co-sharer landlords separately, may establish the right to sue separately for the shares of rent receivable by the separate shareholders, yet such an agreement merely affects the right to sue separately for rent and in no other respect modifies the terms of the holding. 1. ——— Altering property without consent of co-sharers—Growing Indigo. Several persons jointly held lands which were not divided by metes and bounds, but in specified shares. One of the shareholders leased out his share or interest in the lands. The lessee sowed indigo on the joint lands. The other shareholders brought a suit to restrain the lessee of their co-sharer from growing indigo on the land. Held, that a co-sharer cannot use ijmali lands so as to alter the condition of the property as regards the other shareholders without their consent; that indigo as a crop being valueless for purposes of distraint, the lessee must be restrained from growing it without the consent of all the proprietors. 3. ——— Cultivation of Indigo by one co-sharer without consent of others—Injunction as between co-sharers—Practice of the English Courts in granting injunction, applicability of. W, while in possession of an entire mouzah as ijaradar, had under an arrangement with the proprietors built factories and cultivated indigo by reclaiming a quantity of waste land. On the expiration of his lease, W, who still held a portion of the mouzah in ijara from a 2-anna co-sharer, continued to cultivate indigo on the khas lands as before, and, disregarding the opposition of the 14-anna co-sharers, claimed an exclusive title to do so. The 14-anna co-sharers thereupon brought a suit against W for ijmali possession of the khas lands, and prayed, among other things, for an injunction prohibiting the defendant from sowing indigo upon the ijmali lands without the plaintiffs' consent, and also for a general injunction to prohibit the defendant from throwing any obstacles in the way of plaintiffs holding ijmali possession of the lands. The Court below granted an injunction prohibiting the defendant from growing indigo on the khas lands without the consent of the plaintiffs. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction; but having regard to the circumstances under which the defendant cultivated the lands, it was necessary to vary the injunction granted by the Court below by making it an injunction restraining the defendant from excluding by any means the plaintiffs from their enjoyment of the ijmali possession of the lands. But held on appeal to the Privy Council (reversing the above decision), that the resistance being made by the co-sharer in occupation simply with the object of protecting himself in the profitable use of the land, in good husbandry, and not in denial of the other's title, such resistance was no ground for proceedings on the part of the other to obtain a decree for joint possession or for damages; nor would granting an injunction be the proper remedy. As the Courts in Bengal, in cases where no specific rule exists, are to act according to "justice, equity, and good conscience," so, on its being found that where land was held in common between the parties, one of them was in the act of cultivating a part of the land which was not actually used by the other, it would not have been consistent with this rule to restrain the former from proceeding with his proper cultivation; but money compensation, at a proper rate, in respect of the exclusive use by, and benefit to, the one who, though possessing in common, was carrying on cultivation for himself, not unsuitable in itself, was awarded between the parties. 38. ——— Land dedicated to family idol—Land excluded from partition of family property and declared inalienable—Subsequent purchase from Escheat Department of Government—Sale in execution. By a partition deed by the six members of a Hindu family it was provided that part of the land of the family should be set apart for the maintenance of the family idol and should be inalienable, and the rest of the land was divided equally. Subsequently the Government claimed the dedicated land as an escheat, and sold it to the members of the family jointly, of whom one built a house on part of it—less than one-sixth—with the consent of the others. It would be subversive of the right of joint owners to hold that it is open to any co-sharer, who may appear first on the field to seize possession of any land newly formed by accretion to the joint estate and hold it to the permanent exclusion of the other co-sharers. Watson & Co. v. *Ram Chund Dutt, I. And though the other co-sharer had granted a new lease when the first lease expired in 1275, yet as the plaintiff refused to do so, and had ever since treated the defendant as a trespasser, the defendant had no right of occupation so far as regarded the plaintiff's share. One of the raiyats who alleged that he had been dispossessed brought a suit to recover possession of his separate share of the jote against the other co-sharers and the patnidars, and put the receipts in evidence to show that the patnidars had consented to the jote being divided and held in separate shares. Held, that they were insufficient to do so; and that the suit could not be maintained in its present form. GOBABJAN v. MOSHIATOOLAH . . . 1 C. L. R. 537

10. ———— Suit for possession against single shareholder for portion of joint estate held separately by agreement. A suit for possession of land will not lie against a single shareholder for a particular portion of a joint estate held separately under an existing arrangement acquiesced in by the plaintiffs and agreed to by the other co-sharers, nor can the plaintiffs let to a tenant the property in the lawful possession of such shareholder. 11. ———— Suit by one co-sharer to redeem more than his share—Subsequent severance of interest—Parties—Time of taking objection. In 1805 a two-anna share in certain property held by co-sharers was mortgaged to the defendant. The mortgage was effected by the mortgagor as manager of all the co-sharers in union. In 1848 one of the co-sharers redeemed his share of two pies in the mortgaged property, and a further share of two pies therein was redeemed by a second co-sharer in 1867. The plaintiff was admittedly the owner of another two-pie share; but he now sued the defendant to redeem the whole of the property still unredeemed, viz., a one-anna eight pies share of the original mortgage. The defendant objected that the plaintiff could only redeem his own two-pie share, which had become separated from the rest. The plaintiff denied that the estate had been divided. Held, that the plaintiff's claim being to redeem all that remained of the estate in the mortgagee's possession, the suit could not be maintained, unless all the other persons interested in the equity of redemption were before the Court either as co-plaintiffs or as defendants. Without their presence, the suit could not be properly disposed of, and the excuse, that the defendant did not take objection at the right time, had, under such circumstances, no validity. As owner of a two-pie share, which by consent of all interested had become an estate wholly separated from the other parts of the original aggregate, the plaintiff would have been bound to set forth the transactions on which his right rested. After such sale, A, the purchaser, took possession. Subsequently the tenant executed a mortgage, and a decree being obtained by the mortgagee, the whole tenure was brought to sale in execution thereof and purchased by the mortgagee, who proceeded to oust A. In a suit by A to recover possession of his half share of the tenure on the footing of his purchase:—Held, that, as it appeared that the mortgagor, whose rights and interests only were thus sold, was only one of several co-sharers, in the absence of the co-sharers who were not parties to the suit, A was not entitled to the relief he sought. The mortgage-debt not having been paid within such term, the conditional vendee applied, as against the lumberdars, for foreclosure, and the mortgage having been foreclosed sued all the co-sharers including the lumberdars for possession of the mehal, alleging that the lumberdars had acted in the matter of the conditional sale, not only for themselves, but as agents of the other co-sharers. Held, that, inasmuch as the other co-sharers had not either expressly or by implication authorized the lumberdars to enter into the particular contract represented by the conditional sale, and as they had not ratified such contract, they were not bound by the conditional sale and foreclosure. 17. ——— Suit concerning joint property—Suit for khas possession—Exclusive possession of one co-sharer—Partition—Denial of title in written statement—Cause of action—Improvement by tenant—Meliorating waste. Where one co-sharer holds possession of certain land, and deals with it in a particular way and in the ordinary course, and another co-sharer objects to that dealing or to that course of conduct, his proper remedy is to sue for partition, by which the rights of all the co-sharers may be adjusted and the loss sustained by one may be made good at the expense of another. When one co-sharer landlord, in exclusive possession of a waste plot of land, although such exclusive possession may be held with the permission of the other co-sharer landlord, leases it out to a tenant, who improves it without any objection on the part of the latter, it is not open to the latter to obtain khas possession of the land so improved, jointly either with the lessor landlord or with the tenant. 24. ——— Suit by a recorded co-sharer for recorded share of profits—N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), ss. 93 and 94—Suit for settlement of accounts—Limitation. Where one collecting co-sharer in a mehal sued other collecting co-sharers, not being lumberdars of the mehal, for a refund of profits which the plaintiff alleged the defendants to have collected over and above the shares which they were entitled to collect :—Held, by TYRRELL and KNOX, JJ., that this was not a suit by a recorded co-sharer for a recorded share of the profits of a mehal within the meaning of the former portion of s. 93, cl. (h), of Act XII of 1881, but was a suit for a settlement of accounts within the meaning of the latter portion of the same clause ; and that, such being the case, the period of limitation applicable was that prescribed by the third paragraph of s. 94 of the abovementioned Act. Dabee Deen v. Goorga Pershad, 3 N.W. 49, referred to by TYRRELL, J. Per BURKITT, J., contra—" The suit "... If the main and substantial object of the suit is to obtain a settlement of accounts, and the obtaining a decree for a share of the profits is only the ulterior object of obtaining such settlement of accounts, then the suit is to be regarded as a suit for settlement of accounts. If the main and substantial object of the suit is to recover a share of profits which the defendant has received in excess of what he is entitled to, and if the Court is only asked to go into the accounts incidentally to that main object,

31. ———— Suits for rents collected by one co-sharer in respect of another's share—Intermeddler—Suit for recovery of rents—Intermeddler, liability of. The lessee of two-thirds of a five biswas zamindari share asserted and exercised a right of collecting rents in respect not only of the two-thirds, but also of the remaining one-third. It appeared that he made these collections not as a matter of contract, but as an intermeddler and in defiance of the wishes of the holder of the one-third share. Subsequently a suit was brought against him by a purchaser of the five biswas for recovery of rents so collected, the claim extending to rents which the defendant might have collected, but neglected to collect, and which were consequently lost to the plaintiff. Held, that the defendant, not having been under any obligation to collect the rents of the one-third share, could not be made liable for any of such rents which he had not actually collected, and that, as the collection expenses had exceeded the amount collected, the suit must be dismissed. The defence of the tenant, defendant No. 1, was denial of relationship of landlord and tenant, and payment to the co-sharer landlords: Held, that the payment to the co-sharer landlord, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, was not sufficient to discharge the defendant No. 1 from liability to the plaintiffs. Ahamudeen v. *Grish Chunder Shamunt, I. The other co-sharers were made defendants, but did not contest the suit. Held, that, inasmuch as it had been shown that the tenant-defendant had, on previous occasions, paid the plaintiff rent separately, though not in the proportionate share now demanded by him, and it being further to be presumed that the co-sharers admitted the plaintiff's claim, such suit would lie. Where co-sharers in an undivided property acquiesce in a decision declaring one of their number the owner of a recognized share in such property, it is not open to a tenant (who had previously agreed to pay his rent in accordance with the shares of the respective part-owners) to refuse payment of the proportionate share of the rent claimed by such co-sharer as the owner of the recognized share, simply on the ground that he had never before paid rent so proportioned to such co-sharer. 76. ——— ——— Arrangement for separate payment of rents—Evidence of arrangement—Parties—Suits for arrears of rent—Suit for kabuliat—Cancellation of lease. Where it has been arranged between the co-sharers of an estate and their tenant that he shall pay each co-sharer his proportionate share of the entire rent, each co-sharer may bring a separate suit against the tenant for such proportionate share. In the absence of such an arrangement, no such suit can be maintained. Such an arrangement may be evidenced either by direct proof or by usage from which its existence may be presumed, and is perfectly consistent with the continuance of the original lease of the entire tenure. But an arrangement of this nature will not enable one co-sharer to sue the tenant for a kabuliat, for a co-sharer who obtains a kabuliat, is bound at the request of the tenant to give him a pottah upon the same terms, and the grant and acceptance of a binding lease of any separate share cannot exist contemporaneously with an original lease of the entire tenure. 87. ——— Co-sharers, suit by one of several, for separate share of rent, or in alternative for whole rent due if more than share claimed should be found due—Parties. The plaintiffs, some of the co-sharers in certain lands, instituted a suit against a tenant and the remaining co-sharer P, alleging that the tenant held under a pottah granted by all the co-sharers; that rent was due from him for the period in suit; and that they had ascertained from P that he alleged that he had received his share of the rent for that period from the tenant, and that he refused to join as plaintiff in the suit. They accordingly prayed (a) for a decree for the amount of their share of the rent against the tenant; (b) if it should appear that any part of P's share of the rent remained unpaid, the requisite extra Court-fee might be received and a decree made for whole of the arrears in favour of themselves and P, and that the latter might, if he consented, be made a co-plaintiff; (c) that if it appeared that P had realized more than his share of the rent, a decree might be made against him for the excess and against the tenant for the balance. The plaint also asked for costs and further relief. The tenant contested the suit and submitted that it was in effect a suit for plaintiff's share of the rent only, and could not therefore be maintained. He further pleaded that the plaintiffs and P were members of a joint Hindu family, of which P was the manager, and that, under arrangement with the latter, he had applied the rent due under the pottah towards the liquidation of debts due under bonds in P's name, but for which the joint family were liable. The first Court dismissed the suit on the preliminary issue that it was in substance a suit for a specific share of the rent by some only of the co-sharers, and that, there being no agreement by the tenant to pay the co-sharers their respective shares of the rent separately, such a suit would not lie. Held (upholding the order of the lower Appellate Court), that the order of the first Court was wrong. The suit, as framed, was necessarily a suit in the alternative; and as the plaintiffs were necessarily not aware whether any portion of P's share of the rent was due or not, but believing that none was due, they could only claim their share, asking to have the plaint amended so as to include the whole rent due if it should appear that anything was due to P, and thus bring the suit within the rule that, in the absence of special agreement between a tenant and co-sharers to pay their rateable proportion of the rent, a suit by one of the co-sharers must be for the entire rent due, making his co-sharers defendants if they refuse to join as plaintiffs. The prayer of the plaint fully provided for this, and the suit should have been tried on its merits and the plaint amended if the facts proved showed that any rent remained unpaid and due to P as asked for by the plaintiffs. On no account shall any larger amount be demanded." In a suit instituted when the land had been fully brought under cultivation, and after measurement, the plaintiff claimed only her own share of the rent and her co-sharers did not join her as co-plaintiffs, nor were they made defendants. Held, that the suit was not maintainable. What the lease contemplated under the circumstances which had arisen was a final adjustment of the rent, and such an adjustment could be obtained only by a suit brought by all the co-sharers or by some of them if the others refused to join, but in that case the suit must be for the adjustment of the entire rent, and all the necessary parties must be properly before the Court. 89. ——— Suit by a joint proprietor for arrears of rent—Kabuliat executed prior to Bengal Tenancy Act—Covenant for a higher rate—Enhancement of rent. In a kabuliat executed in 1881, it was stipulated that, upon the expiry of the term of seven years fixed therein, a fresh lease should be executed that, should the defendant cultivate the lands without executing a fresh kabuliat, he would pay rent at the rate of R4 a bigha (a rate much higher than that fixed for the term). No fresh kabuliat was executed on expiry of the term, and the plaintiff, a part proprietor collecting rent separately, brought this suit for arrears of rent at the new rate of R4. The defendant objected, inter alia, that the plaintiff, being a part proprietor was not entitled to sue for enhanced rent. The first Court gave a decree at an enhanced rate. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the whole suit on the ground that, the suit being one for enhanced rent and the plaintiff a part proprietor, the suit did not lie. Held, that, the kabuliat having been executed before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, the present case did not come within the operation

Plaintiff brought this suit for the whole of the rent, claiming only his own share of it, making those co-sharers defendants who did not join as plaintiffs. The terms of the defendant's pottah were that the whole of the lands being brought under cultivation, the landlords would be at liberty to measure the lands of the ganti, and if the land be found greater in quantity than 150 bighas, the tenant would pay rent at the rate of 10 annas per bigha. The lands being found greater than the said quantity, the plaintiff prayed for a decree for rent at that rate for the whole area. The defendant pleaded, inter alia, that the plaintiff, as a fractional sharer in the landlord's interest, could not sue him alone. Held, that, the plaintiff having sued for the whole rent and made all the non-joining co-sharers parties defendants, there was no defect in the suit. Bindu Bashini Dasi v. *Peari Mohun Bose, I. But a sale in execution of a decree for rent obtained by the same landlords in a suit subsequently instituted against the purchaser, but after the latter had parted with his interest in the jote to a third party, did not affect the rights acquired by such third party by his purchase. The plaintiff then presented a petition to the High Court praying that the order of the Judge remanding the suit might be set aside under the provisions of s. 35, Act XXIII of 1861, on the ground that, as the value of the property in suit was admittedly more than R5,000, the Judge had exceeded his powers in hearing the appeal. The High Court held that it had no power under s. 35 of Act XXIII of 1861 to entertain the application, as it was open to the petitioner to present an appeal against the order of the Judge remanding the suit, and that he must proceed by way of appeal. The plaintiff's attorney thereupon applied for an order upon the plaintiff and the defendant, or either of them, to pay his costs. Held, that the High Court has general jurisdiction over its suitors; that although a defendant has the right to compromise with a plaintiff without the knowledge of the plaintiff's attorney, such compromise must be made with the honest intention of ending the litigation, and not with any design to deprive the attorney of his costs, and he cannot make a payment to the plaintiff under that compromise, if he has notice of the lien for the costs of the plaintiff's attorney. 26. ——— Solicitor's lien for costs—Summary jurisdiction of Court over suitors—Compromise by parties without knowledge of solicitor—Solicitor's right to oppose motion—Negotiable security—Transfer of negotiable security by debtor to his creditor—Effect. By a private compromise between Cullianji the plaintiff in the first suit, and Lakshmibai, the 6th defendant, who was also the plaintiff in the second suit, it was agreed that the plaintiff should give to Lakshmibai certain immoveable property and R15,853 in full settlement of her claim and a further sum of R500 for her solicitor's costs. On the 21st February 1904, possession of the immoveable property was given and a sum of R500 paid to Lakshmibai. Cullianji also gave to her 3 hundis for R5,000, R5,000 and R5,853 respectively, but the hundis were dishonoured on their due dates. In March and April 1904, the plaintiff paid two sums of R5,000 to Lakshmibai by cheque, in lieu of the two hundis for R5,000. On the 4th June 1904, Lakshmibai's solicitor gave notice to the plaintiff, that he had a lien for costs on the sum of R15,853 agreed to be paid by the plaintiff to his client. On the 22nd of June 1904, the plaintiff paid the sum of R5,853 to Lakshmibai, in cash, in respect of the hundi for R5,853, which was dishonoured. The plaintiff thereupon moved for an order, authorizing the delivery to him of certain property, alleging that he had settled and satisfied the claims of Lakshmibai. Lakshmibai's solicitor opposed the motion on the ground tha

the settlement and satisfaction were collusive transactions intended to cheat him out of his costs and asked the Court to order the plaintiff to deposit the sum of R9,000 as security for the same. Held, that in the absence of fraud or collusion between the parties, the solicitor was entitled to be paid his taxed costs, by the plaintiff, up to R5,853, being the amount paid by the plaintiff after notice of the lien. The High Court of Bombay has a summary jurisdiction over its suitors for the purpose of enforcing a solicitor's lien for costs: and in enforcing it the Court must be guided by the principles of English law. Whether the solicitor moves the Court by an application of his own or appears to oppose a motion of the party against whom the lien for costs is alleged to arise, in either case he calls in aid the equitable interference of the Court under its summary jurisdiction. Devkabai v. *Jefferson, Bhaishankar and Dinsha, I. for leave to appeal in formâ pauperis from a decree, dated the 16th September 1882, the application, after giving credit for 86 days spent in obtaining the necessary papers, being out of time by 73 days. On the 16th August 1884, an order was passed allowing an application which had been made for review of the previous order to stand over, pending the decision of a connected case. On the 24th April 1885, the connected case having then been decided, the application for review was heard and dismissed. Nothing more was done by the appellant until the 18th June 1885, when, on her application, an order was passed by a single Judge allowing her, under s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), to file an appeal on full stamp paper, and she thereupon having borrowed money on onerous conditions to defray the necessary institution-fees, presented her appeal, which was admitted provisionally by a single Judge. Held, by MAHMOOD, J., that the ex parte order of the 18th June 1885 was one which the Civil Procedure Code nowhere allowed and was ultra vires, and that the bench before which the appeal came for hearing was competent to determine whether the order admitting the appeal should stand or be set aside. Dubey Sahai v. *Ganeshi Lal, I. 65. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 220—Practice—Costs of guardian ad litem—Advance by plaintiff for costs of minor defendants—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 68, 70 —Right to recover amount advanced. Plaintiff having, in a prior suit, sued the defendants, who were minors, and their father, for specific performance, was ordered by the Court to advance money to the guardian ad litem of the minors (who was appointed by the Court), to enable him to conduct their defence. Plaintiff succeeded, but the Court refused to provide in its decree for the repayment to plaintiff of the amount so advanced. On the plaintiff bringing this suit to recover that amount :—Held, per SUBRAMANIA AYYAR, J., (i) that the Court in which the prior suit had been brought had power neither to direct the plaintiff to make the advances to the guardian as had been done, nor to award the amount so paid as costs in the cause. The present suit, therefore, was not unsustainable for the reason that the subject-matter of it was one for the Court to have dealt with in the previous suit ; (ii) that the circumstances of the case were not such as to render the amount recoverable under s. 70 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as the defendants could not be said to have enjoyed the benefit of the expenditure ; (iii) that payments or charges connected with legal expenses in which infants are concerned may, in certain circumstances, come under the head of necessaries within the meaning of s. 68 of the Contract Act. in defence of the suit by the guardian ad litem out of the plaintiff's advances might be allowable if it be alleged and proved that there were reasonable grounds for the defence put forward, though it proved unsuccessful. But that this ground could not now be relied upon on second appeal, inasmuch as it had not been put forward in the Court below, when an issue relating to it could have been framed. Per DAVIES, J., that a matter of this nature can and should be settled in the suit in which it arises ; and that where a plaintiff is successful, a supplementary issue should be framed and tried as to the amount due to him on account of advances made by him to the guardian ad litem for conducting the defence, and a decree passed in his favour for the total amount of costs found to have been properly incurred in the case by the guardian out of such advances. 66. ——— Indemnity, contract of—Costs incurred in course of ascertaining and settling claim. In 1834 a lease of a house was granted to A for a term of ten years. The lease contained a covenant to repair. A died, and B, his administrator, assigned the lease to another, and it ultimately became vested in the plaintiff. In 1872 the plaintiff assigned the lease to the defendants, "under and subject to the covenants" therein contained. The defendants failed to repair, and after the term had expired, C, the representative of the lessor, sued B for arrears of rent and damages for non-repair. B defended the suit, but C obtained a decree against him for R6,167-3 and costs, amounting in all to R8,328-3. His own costs amounted to R1,491-1. In 1876 B paid C the R8,328-3. In 1877 B sued the plaintiff for the amount which he had been compelled to pay C, and for the amount of his own costs. The plaintiff gave notice to the defendants to intervene and defend if they desired, but they did not reply, and the plaintiff consented to a decree for R6,932-12-11 with costs. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted the present suit to recover from the defendants the sum recovered from him by B, together with his own costs of defence. Held, that, in the case of contracts of indemnity, the liability of the party indemnified to a third person is not only contemplated at the time of the indemnity, but is the very moving cause of that contract ; and in cases of such a nature costs reasonably incurred in resisting, or reducing, or ascertaining the claim may be recovered. Held, therefore, that the costs incurred by B in the suit instituted against him by C, and those incurred by the plaintiff in the suit by B against him, were reasonably and properly incurred, and that he was entitled to recover them from the defendant. properties. In 1886 K S mortgaged his undivided share to S C in consideration of a loan advanced by S C to him. In 1887 K S brought a suit to which S C was not made a party against K B for partition, and on 27th April 1888 obtained a decree under which a commission of partition was issued. In the course of the suit, both K S and K B died—K B on 2nd September 1888 and K S on 30th March 1892—and by orders of Court their sons were put on the record in place of their respective fathers. The return to the commission of partition was made on 24th February 1892, and, on 20th July 1893, an order was made confirming the return, and under s. 222 of the Civil Procedure Code, charging the costs of suit and of the commission of partition to the shares of the plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, in the suit. Meanwhile in July 1889, S C brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree, dated 5th August 1889, for an account and sale, and in that suit a final order for sale was made on 5th January 1891, which, however, was only filed on 19th August 1893. Under that order, the property was advertised for sale, the return to the commission of partition being set out in the abstract of title as part of the title, and the property to be sold being described as a divided moiety. In an application made both in the partition and mortgage suits, by the defendants in the partition suit for an order for sale of a portion of their share of the property in order to pay the costs of the suit and of the partition and other debts and liabilities for which they were liable :—Held, that the mortgagee, having had the benefit of the partition, and having accepted and approved of it as part of his title, as shown by the proceedings for sale, was, though not a party to the partition suit, bound by the equities attaching to the mortgaged property as incidents of the partition. He was, therefore, liable in respect of a proportionate share of the charge for costs of the partition created by the order of Court made in that suit under s. 222 of the Civil Procedure Code, and such proportionate share of those costs should be deducted in priority out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property. The defendants in the partition suit, however, not being parties to the mortgage suit, such an order could not be properly made at their instance, but they should enforce the charge for costs against the mortgagee by supplemental suit, and the Court stayed the sale of the property for a reasonable time to give the parties an opportunity of moving for stay of the sale in any such suit as might be instituted. 104. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 220, 379—Suit for injunction or damages—Payment into Court by defendant to satisfy plaintiff's claim—Costs in such case—Costs—Discretion of Court. The plaintiffs sued alleging certain windows in their house to be ancient windows and complaining that a building in course of erection by the defendant would, when completed according to the building plan, obstruct the light through the said windows. In his written statement the defendant denied that the plaintiffs' windows were ancient, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the light and air as an easement. At the time of filing his written statement, the defendant paid into Court the sum of R200 which in his written statement he stated was more than sufficient to compensate the plaintiffs for any damages they might sustain, and which he (defendant) paid in without prejudice to his contentions, but for the sake of peace and to avoid litigation. At the hearing the plaintiffs abandoned their claim for an injunction, but insisted that they were entitled to more than R200 as damages. The Court found that the plaintiffs' windows were ancient, but that the R200 paid into Court were sufficient damages. It therefore ordered that the defendant should pay all the plaintiffs' costs up to the date at which the R200 were paid into Court, and as to their subsequent costs that the defendant should pay three-fourths of the plaintiffs' subsequent costs, and the plaintiffs should pay to the defendant one-fourth of the defendant's subsequent costs. The Court offered to simplify its order by directing the defendant to pay all the costs of the plaintiffs up to the date of paying the R200 into Court and half the plaintiffs' taxed costs subsequent to that date. The defendant appealed, contending that under s. 379 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) the plaintiffs should have been ordered to pay all the defendant's costs subsequent to the payment into Court. Held, that the suit was not one to recover a debt or damages, and therefore s. 379 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply. That being so, the Judge had full discretion under s. 220 of the Civil Procedure Code to apportion the costs, and the Court of Appeal would not interfere with that discretion. Held, also, that in cases not being suits to recover a debt or damages where money is paid into Court, the principle underlying s. 379 of the Civil Procedure Code ought to regulate the discretion of the Court in directing the payment of costs. 105. ———— Payment out of Court—Failure to join in application to take money out of Court—Suit for share of money. A suit by A having been decreed and execution proceedings taken out, the judgment-debtors paid into Court the amount decreed. Subsequently the decree-holder (A) and his cousin (M) put in a petition intimating that the money belonged to them in equal shares, and the Court afterwards held a proceeding in the presence of the vakil that no steps had been taken by his client to take out the money, and that the name of M had been registered with that of A as decree-holders, and the money was available for payment on their joint application. Eventually M sued A for a moiety of the amount. The Subordinate Judge, holding that it was entirely owing to the passive opposition of A that the money could not be drawn out from the Court, decreed the claim with costs. Held, that the decision of the Subordinate Judge was correct and just. 110. ———— Preliminary Issue—Cost of preliminary issue in partition suit—Stamp in partition suit. The plaintiff brought a suit to have 99 items of property partitioned. The plaint bore a Court-fee stamp of R10. The defendants admitted that three of the properties were ancestral and joint; but as to the other items, the second defendant stated that they were the self-acquired property of her deceased husband, and contended that the plaint was insufficiently stamped, as the object of the suit was to obtain a declaration of title to, and possession of, properties in which the plaintiff had no interest. An issue was raised on this point, and on this issue the Subordinate Judge allowed the objection and rejected the plaint. On appeal: Held by PETHERAM, C.J., and NORRIS, J., that the plaint was sufficiently stamped. The only relief prayed for was partition, and for the purposes of the stamp the cause of action, which is stated in the plaint, and that only, must be looked at. The members of the Appeal Bench, however, differed in opinion as regards the question of costs, PETHERAM, C.J., being of opinion that the costs of the appeal should be treated in the same way as the rest of the costs in the case, and be divided between the parties to the partition; and NORRIS, J., holding that the respondent having failed on appeal, ought to pay the costs; and on this question an appeal was preferred under the Letters Patent, cl. 15. Held by PRINSEP and TREVELYAN, JJ., that the costs of the appeals were severable from the general costs of the suit, and therefore, though the suit was one for partition, the principle that the unsuccessful party must pay the costs was applicable so far as the appeals were concerned; the respondent therefore should pay all the costs in the two appeals. Held by PIGOT, J., that the respondent should pay in any event her own costs of the preliminary issue and of the appeal, but that, as to the plaintiff's costs of that issue and of the appeal, they should be in the discretion of the Court as between the parties to this appeal, such costs being in no case to form part of the costs of the partition. 121. ——— Assignment of decree pending appeal—Assignee of decree made respondent to appeal—Adding parties on appeal—Liability of Assignee for Costs of hearing in lower Court. The Standard Oil Company and one E sued the defendant for damages. The lower Court found that there was no privity of contract between the company and the defendant, and dismissed the suit of the company (plaintiff No. 1) with costs, but passed a decree for E (plaintiff No. 2) with costs. The defendant appealed, in the first instance, making E the sole respondent. The company, however, gave the defendant (appellant) notice that the decree obtained by E had been assigned to them. Whereupon he (the appellant) obtained leave to make the company party respondents as assignees of the decree from E. The company objected to be made respondents. The Appeal Court reversed the decree of the lower Court and dismissd the suit, and the question arose whether the company could be made liable for the general costs of the hearing in the lower Court. Held, that the company were liable only for the costs of the appeal in which they had taken an active part, but not for the general costs of hearing in the lower Court, except so far as the suit was their suit. E was liable for the costs throughout. The appellant (defendant) was not entitled, by bringing the company on the record against their will, to obtain an additional security for the costs already incurred in the lower Court. The purchaser of the alienated property appealed to the High Court, and the decree was set aside on the ground that the suit was misconceived and was not one under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the judgment concluded by saying merely that "the appeal is allowed with costs" without specifying any names of parties by whom the costs were to be paid. The decree, when drawn up and signed, named to two plaintiffs and the 42 other persons as respondents and directed the costs to be paid by the plaintiffs respondents. Held, in an application for amendment of the decree, that since the 42 persons did not themselves join as parties as provided for under s. 32 of the Code and were not parties to the suit in the sense that they had any voice or control in the conduct of it, they were not party respondents, though they might fall under the category of persons interested under s. 30, and so might be bound by the decision. At the time of its institution, Act XV of 1882 was applicable, by s. 22 of which Act a plaintiff was deprived, in a suit cognizable by the Small Cause Court, of his costs if he obtained a decree "for less than R2,000," unless the Judge who tried it certified it as a fit case to be tried in the High Court. The suit was not determined until after the passing of Act I of 1895, by s. 11 of which the deprivation of costs applied to cases in which the plaintiff obtained a decree for less than R1,000. The Judge made a decree in favour of the plaintiff and, without certifying that the case was one fit to be brought in the High Court, he allowed the plaintiff the costs of the suit. Held, on appeal, that the case was governed by s. 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868); Act I of 1895 was not applicable, and the plaintiff was not entitled to his costs of suit. 148. ——— Administrator General's Act (II of 1874), s. 35—Plaintiff succeeding as to part of claim only. In April 1885, A entered into an agreement in writing with B, whereby he agreed to act as the manager of B's zamindaris and other landed properties for three years on certain terms therein mentioned. The agreement was duly registered. On the 15th of June 1882, B sued the Administrator-General of Bengal, as administrator of A's estate, to recover certain sums of money, set forth in detail in the plaint, as having been received by A and not accounted for, stating that they had been misappropriated by A. Held, that, under the special terms of the Administrator General's Act, II of 1874, the plaintiff (having succeeded as to part of his claim only) was not entitled to any costs as against A's estate, but was liable to pay costs on the portion of his claim which was disallowed. 149. ——— Suit for injunction or damages—Decree refusing injunction, but not giving damages— "Substantial success." In a suit for an injunction or damages for obstruction by the defendant of the plaintiff's light and air, the defendant paid R200 into Court. The first Court granted an injunction, but on appeal the decree was varied, and an injunction refused, but R500 damages given to the plaintiff. On the question of costs, it was argued for the defendant (appellant) that he should be given his costs of appeal, as he had succeeded in setting aside the injunction granted by the lower Court, and should also get his costs of hearing in the lower Court, as the whole contest there had been as to the right to an injunction, which in appeal had been refused. The defendant had paid R200 into Court when he filed his written statement, and would have paid more if he could have obtained any indication from the plaintiff of the amount that would satisfy him. Nothing, however, would satisfy the plantiff but an injunction, and he had failed to get it. Held, that the plaintiff should have his costs of hearing in the lower Court, and that each party should pay his costs of the appeal and of the proceedings on the rule for an injunction before the trial, the ordinary rule should be observed, and the costs should follow the event. The event in this case was that the plaintiff had proved his case against the defendant, although he had not got the precise form of relief which he wanted. If a party substantially succeeds, he is entitled to his costs. GHANASHAM NILKANT NADKARNI v. MOROBA RAMCHANDRI PAI I. L. R. 18 Bom. 474

152. ———— Third persons, payment of costs by—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 187—Power of Court to order costs to be paid by person not a party to the suit—Sham Plaintiff. A L D and others having got a decree in a suit in which S B D a purdah-nashin, was plaintiff, a rule nisi was obtained by them against J C S and another, on the ground that he was the real plaintiff and S B D only a nominal one. It appeared that S B D had no means of her own, but lived in the house of J C S who could explain nothing of her circumstances, or why she was residing in his house; but he stated that she had purchased the former plaintiff's right in the suit against a decree, she having been previously uninterested in the matter, and the only reason suggested for her doing so was that a small portion of the premises in question would serve for carrying out a religious purpose said to be entertained by her. The Court found that S B D was only a sham plaintiff, and that J C S was the real one, and the rule was made absolute. Held, that the words "another party" in s. 187 of Act VIII of 1859 should be read as if identical with "another party to the suit." Held, also, that the Court cannot, by its judgment in any given suit, deal directly with persons not before it in that suit; that the Court has the same power of directing that the costs of any party to a suit for the recovery of land shall be paid by a person who is not on the record, as the late Supreme Court had, and as the Courts at Westminster still possess and exercise; that the recovery of costs from the real plaintiff in a suit in which the plaintiff on the record is only a sham one is not a step in the proceedings in any particular suit, nor can it be made the subject of a separate plaint, but is of the nature of a substantive proceeding in personam, and is within the equitable jurisdiction of the Court; that if the plaintiff on the record in a suit be only a sham one, the defendant may proceed against the real plaintiff for costs; that the real plaintiff in a suit in which the one on the record is a sham plaintiff is liable for the costs. 154. ———— Order for payment of costs by person not party to the suit, and after dismissal of suit—Power of Mofussil Courts. The plaintiffs brought a suit for the recovery of certain property and R and B, being desirous of entering into a transaction for the purpose of assisting the plaintiffs to recover it, agreed that they should receive one-half the property that might be recovered in consideration of their assistance in recovering it; they thereupon purchased from the plaintiffs for a nominal sum one-half their interest in the property, but instead of taking a conveyance in their own names, and joining as plaintiffs in the suit, they took a conveyance in the name of one S, an indigent member of their family and dependent on them for support, and caused the suit to be brought in the name of S and the plaintiff jointly. The Judge found that S had been put forward by R and B in order to save themselves from having to pay the costs of the suits which were brought to establish the claim, in case they should be unsuccessful, and was of opinion that R and B were the real plaintiffs in the suit, though acting in the name of S. Two suits had then been brought by the plaintiffs and S, which were dismissed, and decrees for costs given in favour of the defendants; and the Judge ordered that the names of R and B should be added to the decrees for costs. Held, that, though the Judge might have had power to make the order whilst the suits were pending before him, he had no power to make such order after dismissing the suits. Mofussil Courts have no power to make orders in pœnam against persons who are not parties to the suit, such as is possessed by the original side of the High Court. 157. ——————— Payment or security for costs by person not a party to the suit—Suit against stranger to suit for costs—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 73. Where it appears that the plaintiff in a suit is in fact suing on behalf of another person who is not a party on the record, the ordinary practice is to require security for costs and to stay the proceedings till it is given. The rejection by the Court of an application under Act VIII of 1859, s. 73, to have a stranger, who has an interest in the suit, made a co-plaintiff on the record, cannot give a ground for an action against such stranger for costs incurred in the suit, which would not otherwise lie. The cases in which persons other than parties to the suit have been held liable to costs in England relate to applications either in the cause itself or to the disciplinary and summary jurisdiction of the Courts. They give no support to the contention that an independent action will under such circumstances lie. RAM COOMAR COONDOO v. CHUNDERKANTO MOOKERJEE I. L. R. 2. Calc. 223 : L. R. 4 I. A. 23

2. COSTS OUT OF ESTATE.

1. ———— Administration suit—Next friend—Unnecessary suit—Liability of next friend for costs—Adoption of suit by plaintiff—Costs of solicitor of next friend where suit unnecessary—Solicitor's lien on estate recovered or preserved by suit—Preservation of estate from future risk—Appointment of Receiver—Insane Executrix—Act II of 1874, s. 35. The plaintiff, who was a minor, sued by her next friend (her husband) for the administration of her father, Purshotam Ramji. The defendants in the suit were the plaintiff's mother, Nanbai, who was the widow and executrix of Purshotam Ramji, and one Burjorji, who had been appointed by Nanbai to act for her during her absence on pilgrimage. The plaint alleged that Nanbai was insane and unfit to manage the estate, and that Burjorji was mismanaging and wasting it. A receiver was appointed shortly after the filing of the suit. At the hearing the suit was dismissd as against Burjorji, and the Court ordered that his costs should be paid by the plaintiff's next friend being of opinion that he was the real actor in the suit, and that it would be unfair to make the plaintiff's estate bear the costs of proceedings in which she had no real voice. The Court was further of opinion that at the time the suit was filed Nanbai was not of unsound mind, but that she had subsequently become insane. The usual accounts were ordered to be taken as against Nanbai. The result of taking these accounts was that her administration of the estate as executrix was found to be unimpeachable, and in December 1883 the Court made an order directing that the next friend should pay the costs of the infant plaintiff. The next friend became insolvent, and his solicitors (the respondents) obtained an order from the Judge in chambers that the receiver should pay their costs out of the estate in his hands. The plaintiff appealed. The respondents contended that the plaintiff had adopted the suit, and that they had a lien for their costs—at any rate so far as they were incurred for the recovery and preservation of the estate. Held, that the respondents were not entitled to be paid out of the estate. The plaintiff had done no overt act signifying her adoption of the suit, and the fact that she remained passive was consistent with her disapproval of it, as the decree did not immediately affect her, or require her to take action until the death of her mother Nanbai. Held, also, that the property in the hands of the receiver could not be held to have been recovered by means of the suit, as it appeared that the investments were of a perfectly legitimate nature; that there was no cause for alarm with respect to the safety of the property, and that the suit, so far as it was based on alleged danger to the estate, was quite uncalled for. It was argued for the respondents that the appointment of a receiver preserved the estate from future risk arising from the fact that the executrix Nanbai was of unsound mind. Held, that the mere fact that the appointment of a receiver would preserve the estate from a possible danger in the future could not bring the

2. ——— Administrator General's Act (II of 1874), s. 18 and s. 35—Conflicting claims to property in possession of Administrator-General under order of Court—Costs of Administrator-General in a suit to recover such property, how paid—Expenses of taking care of such property incurred by Administrator-General. The plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 were the daughters of one S, who died in Bombay on the 9th November 1885. Shortly after the death of S, the plaintiff went to Delhi, leaving certain ornaments and other valuables belonging to her locked up in a box, which also contained certain property which had belonged to her mother S. The box remained in the house in which the plaintiff had resided with S. The key of the box was taken by the plaintiff to Delhi. During the plaintiff's absence one of her sisters (defendant No. 3) presented a petition to the High Court alleging that all the property in the said box belonged to her deceased mother S, and was in danger of being misappropriated by the plaintiff. Upon these allegations the Court, on the 16th January 1886, made an order under s. 18 of Act II of 1874, directing the Administrator-General to "take possession of the property of S, and hold the same, subject to the further order of the Court." Pursuant to this order, the Administrator-General took possession of the box and all its contents. The plaintiff, admitting that some of the ornaments in the box had belonged to the estate of S, sued to recover the remainder of the ornaments therein, which she alleged belonged to herself, and which she specified in a separate list. Defendant No. 3 denied her claim and contended that all the property belonged to the estate of S. The other sisters of the plaintiff (defendants Nos. 2, 4, and 5) admitted the plaintiff's claim. The Court held that the plaintiff had proved her claim, and directed that her property should be delivered over to her by the Administrator-General. Held, as to costs, that the Administrator-General was in the position of an interpleading plaintiff, and that he was entitled, in the first instance, to recover his costs from the losing claimant (defendant No. 3). Failing recovery from defendant No. 3, he was entitled to be paid his costs out of the estate of S, and if and in so far as to that estate proved insufficient, he was entitled to recover them out of the property which was the subject-matter of the suit. Held, also, that the costs of the Administrator General included the expenses incurred by him in taking care of the property entrusted to him by the order of the Court; such expenses to be a pportioned according to the amounts respectively belonging to the estate of S and to the plaintiff, and to be paid accordingly out of the said estate and out of the property of the plaintiff. 3. ——— Partnership suit—Deceased partner—Costs of his legal representative ordered out of the estate he represents—Beneficiaries not represented—Parties. The plaintiff as Administrator-General and Administrator of the estate of one, H, filed this suit against the partners of H to recover H's share in the partnership. A decree was made referring it to the Commissioner to take the accounts of the partnership, etc., and the plaintiff's costs were ordered by the said decree to be paid out of the partnership assets, and in case such assets should be insufficient, it was ordered that the plaintiff do recover his costs from the estate of H. There were no assets of the partnership. The plaintiff now took out a summons calling on R as son and legal representative of H to show cause why he should not pay the said costs, or why in default the estate of H in his hands should not be attached. R objected that he was no party to this suit when the decree was made, and neither he nor his father's estate in his hands was bound by it. Held, that the summons must be dismissed. The decree, so far as it purported to affect the estate of H, was not a valid decree, inasmuch as the person or persons beneficially interested in that estate were not then before the Court. 5. ——— Attorney and Client—Trustees—Bills of costs paid by majority of trustees—Right of dissenting trustees to have bills taxed even after payment—Jurisdiction of High Court. In a suit relating to a charitable trust, the decree directed that the costs of all parties thereto, when taxed, should be paid out of the trust fund. Certain bills of costs were subsequently furnished to the trustees by the attorneys. Two of the trustees thought the bills reasonable, and agreed that they should be paid. The third trustee objected to the amount of the bills as exorbitant, and desired that they should be taxed. Notwithstanding his protest, however, the other trustees paid the bills without taxation. He thereupon took out a summons calling upon his co-trustees and the attorney to show cause why the bills should not be taxed, and why they should not refund any sum which had been overpaid. Held, that the dissenting trustee was entitled to have the bills taxed, although they had been paid, and that the High Court had jurisdiction to order taxation to be made. The attorneys of the defendants accordingly brought in their bill of costs, and in taxation it was contended that they should be allowed out of the charity funds all the sums which the taxing master certified they should pay their attorneys. Held, that where the taxing master decided that certain items allowed against the defendants should not come out of the charity funds, his decision could not be disturbed. It does not follow that because a charge is proper to be allowed between an attorney and client that the client, if a trustee, should be allowed that charge out of the trust funds. On taxation of costs of the purchaser, the other parties objected to the costs of two counsel on behalf of the purchaser being allowed. Held, that, having regard to the allegations made, the taxing officer exercised a right discretion in allowing the costs of two counsel. In the matter of BEER NURSING DUTT . . . I. cation to transfer the case from one Judge to another and the order making the transfer makes no provision as to costs, the costs should on taxation be refused between party and party, though they may be allowed between attorney and client. A party to a defended long cause is entitled to appear by two counsel. If both counsel attend throughout the hearing and the other party is ordered to pay costs of the suit their brief fees and full refreshers would be allowed on taxation against the losing party. If the suit is conducted by one counsel only throughout, the full refreshers of the conducting counsel and a nominal refresher of 2 G. Ms. of the other counsel would be properly allowable against the opponent, if ordered to pay costs. If the absent counsel attends for portions of the time the case is at hearing, his refresher, proportionate to the time he attends, would also be properly allowable in addition to the full refresher allowed to the counsel, who attends and conducts the case. Where a party to a defended long cause engages two counsel he has a right to the services of at least one of them. He is under no obligation whatever to engage a third counsel. If both counsel find that they would owing to other engagements be unable to go in and conduct the case, when it is called on, it is obviously the duty of one of them to return the brief. If three counsel are engaged before the hearing it will be for the Taxing Master to consider the fees and refreshers of which two he will allow between party and party and which counsel's fees should go between attorney and client. A Solicitor engaging three counsel is entitled to have his third counsel's costs taxed between attorney and client, if he proves express authority from his client or if he proves that some peculiar contingency arose, which made it necessary for him to engage a third counsel in order to safe-guard his client's interests. If a third counsel is added after the hearing of the suit has commenced such addition must be at the cost of the party doing so. BANOO BEGUM v. MIR AUN ALI (1907) . . . I. L. R. 32 Bom. 262

Where the compromise, however, extends to collateral matters, to matters quite outside the scope of the particular case in which counsel is engaged, in order to bind his client it must be shown that he had given his client special authority to compromise, upon the terms upon which the compromise was effected, and the other side cannot avail themselves of the position that they did not know that it had not been given; they are not entitled to assume as in the case of an apparent authority that it was given and

(c) and (d)—Valuation of suit—Court's power to revise plaintiff's valuation—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 54, cl. (b).* In cases covered by s. 7, sub-s. (iv), cls. (c) and (d) of the Court-fees Act, although it is for the plaintiff to state the amount at which he values the relief sought and although the amount of Court-fees payable varies with the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint, it is open to the Court if a question is raised as to the true valuation of the suit to determine such question, and it is within the power of the Court to take action under s. 54 of the Civil Procedure Code if it is established that the valuation is improper. Where the suit was for a declaration that a mortgage-decree for R10,000 obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff was fraudulent and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from executing it by a sale of the mortgaged properties, held, that the prayer for injunction was a prayer for consequential relief within s. 7, sub-s. (iv), cl. (c) of the Court-fees Act. That the proper value of the relief by way of injunction was the amount sought to be realised under the decree, and the plaintiff's valuation of the same at R100 was so manifestly unjust that the Court was justified in rejecting the plaint under s. 54, Civil Procedure Code. Hari Sanker v. *Kali Kumer, I. 3. ——— and s. 7, cl. 8—"Value—Suit to set aside attachment on land. The meaning of cl. 8, s. 7 of the Court Fees Act, VII of 1870, is, that a person suing to set aside an attachment on land shall in no case be called upon to pay a higher fee than he would have to pay if he were suing for possession of the land. Accordingly, in a suit for setting aside a summary attachment, under Bombay Act I of 1865, placed by the Collector on land held on a settlement, for a period not exceeding thirty years, the value was held to be five times the assessment, and the stamp duty calculated upon it, irrespective of the actual market value or the amount for which the land was attached. 5. ——— and s. 12—Finality of Taxing Officer's decision as to Court-fee—"Final," meaning of—Duty of Court-fees Act Officer. The word "final" in s. 5 of the Court Fees Act has the same meaning as in s. 12, though it is applied to a different subject. The cases in which it has been held that, notwithstanding the use of this word in s. 12, an appeal lies from a decision as to the category in which the relief sought by a plaintiff or appellant falls, do not mean that decisions which the section declares to be "final" are nevertheless appealable, but that the question of category is not a "question relating to valuation," and therefore is not declared by the section to be final. In both s. 5 and s. 12 "final" is used in its ordinary legal sense of unappealable. A decision under s. 5 of the Act is not open to appeal, revision, or review, and is

The plaintiff appealed, assailing the validity of the prior mortgage, and stamped his memorandum of appeal with an ad valorem court fee on the amount of the principal sum of money secured by the prior mortgage. Held, that the proper amount of court-fee payable was an ad valorem court-fee on the amount which the plaintiff had been ordered to pay to the prior mortgagee. Nepal Rai v. *Debi Prasad, All. The market value of the plaintiff's share in the lands was R5,600. The plaint was presented in the Court of First Class Subordinate Judge, as the value of the plaintiff's share was over R5,000. The Subordinate Judge held that the value for Court Fees, that is, R1,944-14-0 should be treated as the value for jurisdiction under s.7, cl. (iv) (b) of the Court Fees Act, 1870, and s. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887, and returned the plaint for presentation in the Court of Second Class Subordinate Judge. Held, reversing the orders, that the suit fell within the jurisdiction of the First Class Subordinate Judge. Held, further, that the suit fell not within s. 7 (iv) (b) but under s. 7 (v) of the Court Fees Act, 1870, and s. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887, did not apply. 3. ——— Declaratory decree—Consequential relief—Court-fees. In a suit for a declaration of proprietary right in respect of a house in which the removal of an attachment of such house in the execution of a decree was sought, the plaintiff did not, as s. 7 of the Court Fees Act directs, state in his plaint the amount at which he valued the relief sought, nor did the Court of first instance cause him to supply this defect. On appeal by the plaintiff from the decree of the Court of first instance dismissing his suit, the lower Appellate Court demanded from the plaintiff Court-fees in respect of his plaint and memorandum of appeal computed on the market value of such house, the plaintiff having only paid in respect of those documents respectively the Court-fees payable in a suit for a declaration of right where no consequential relief is prayed. Held, that the market value of the property could not be taken by the lower Appellate Court to be the value of the relief sought, as the plaintiff did not seek possession of the property, and that, as the valuation of the relief sought rested with the plaintiff, and not the Court, and as in this instance the declaration of right claimed necessarily carried with it the consequential relief sought, of which the value was merely nominal, further Court-fees could not be demanded by the lower Appellate Court from the plaintiff. ——— ——— cl. iv (d)—Valuation by plaintiff of relief sought—Increase of valuation by Court, and return of plaint for want of jurisdiction—Invalidity of order. A plaint was filed in a certain Court, praying for an injunction, the relief sought being valued at R50, on the basis of which valuation the Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. On objection being taken by the defendant that the plaintiff's valuation was incorrect, and that the proper valuation of the suit exceeded the pecuniary limits of the Court's jurisdiction, an issue was framed and the question was tried whether the suit was in fact within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court, with the result that the Judge held the proper valuation of the relief sought to be R2,700, which exceeded the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court. He accordingly returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. Held, that the Court had no power to increase the value of the suit. S. 7, cl. iv (d), of the Court-fees Act requires that, in a suit for an injunction, the plaintiff shall state the amount at which he values the relief sought. 2. ——— Stamp—Construction and applicability of the proviso—Valuation of suits for land in a talukhdari village—Talukhdar's jumma—Remission.—Per WEST and NANABHAI, JJ. The proviso to Art. 5 of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) was clearly intended to provide a standard of valuation in the Bombay Presidency, not only for the comparatively rare case of land forming part, but not a definite share, of an estate paying revenue to Government, but for all cases of suits for land. The theory being that all land is primarily liable to be rated or taxed for the public revenue, any sum not levied according to the appraisement made in order to show the proper amount of the land-tax may be regarded as a remission. In the case of a talukhdari village, the proprietor of which had, under a settlement with Government for a period of twenty-two years, agreed to pay a fixed annual jumma or lump assessment, instead of the full survey assessment for the whole village: Held, by a majority of the Full Bench, that the difference in amount between the jumma and the full survey assessment was a remission, and therefore a suit for possession of lands in this village was to be valued according to cl. 3 of the proviso to Art. 5 of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870). Per BIRDWOOD, J.—The remission contemplated by cl. (3) of the proviso "is an express remission, and not a mere difference in amount between the actual assessment payable by a talukhdar and the survey assessment." The three clauses of the proviso seem to apply only to lands which have been subjected to a survey settlement as ordinarily understood and legally provided for in the Bombay Presidency; the first clause being applicable to lands settled for a period not exceeding thirty years, the second to lands settled for a longer period or permanently, and the third to inam lands on which the whole or a part of the survey assessment has been expressly remitted. The talukhdars are not inamdars. They are landholders liable to pay a land-tax, but not under a survey settlement, such as is applicable to lands for which provision seems to have been specially made in the proviso to Art. 5 of s. 7 of the Court-Fees Act. No part of the proviso, therefore, applies to a suit for the possession of lands in a talukhdari village. Such a suit should be valued according to cl. (d) of Art. of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act. ——— cl. viii—Suit to restore attachment—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 246. A stamp of R10 is sufficient for the plaint or memorandum of appeal in a suit brought, under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, to restore an attachment upon a house which has been removed at the instance of an intervenient under that section. A person whose property was attached was not compelled to resort in the first instance to an application under s. 246 of the late Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859). There was nothing to prevent him from commencing his litigation by a regular suit, if such were his pleasure. Cl. viii of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) would apply to such a suit. The language of that section is not limited to suits to set aside any special kind of attachments on land. It is large enough to include suits brought in pursuance of the permission given by s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, to set aside attachments on land, as well as other suits for that purpose brought independently of that section. The term "land" in cl. viii, s. 7 of the Court Fees Act, does not include a house. Quære: Whether that clause includes all suits to set aside attachments upon land, or all such suits, except where the result of setting aside the attachment would be to alter or set aside a summary decision or order of any Civil Court not established by Letters Patent or of Revenue Court. On reference by the taxing officer of the Court: Held, that the Court-fees to be computed upon each memorandum of appeal was, under s. 7, cl. ix of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) to be according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the deed of mortgage, viz., R1,152,5-4. The powers conferred by ss. 54 (a) and (c) and 55, read with s. 582 of the Civil Procedure Code, or by s. 12 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) read with cl. 2. ——— Execution of Part of Decree—Payment of full amount of Court-fees not necessary for such part-execution—Construction of Act—Court Fees Act, s. 17. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover possession of a house and for mesne profits. In the same suit he also claimed certain account books and documents from the defendant. In paying Court-fees he estimated the mesne profits at R151, and paid on that amount. He obtained a decree, and the amount of mesne profits awarded to him was R3,349-13-3. The decree further directed that possession of the house should be given to him, and that the books and documents should be handed over to him. He now applied for execution of that part of the decree which directed the delivery of the house and of the account books and other documents. The defendant contended that, under s. 11 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), the plaintiff was not entitled to execution of any part of the decree until he paid the proper Court-fees on the sum awarded as mesne profits, viz., R3,349-13-3. Held, that the plaintiff might obtain execution of that part of the decree which ordered delivery of the house and books and documents without paying the fees payable on the amount awarded for mesne profits. S. 11 and s. 17 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) ought to be similarly construed; and the language of the latter section, which deals with multifarious suits, shows that for the purposes of the stamp-revenue such suits are deemed to be a collection of distinct suits relating to the several causes of action combined in them. The word "suit" in the last part of para. 2 of s. 11 of the Court Fees Act does not mean the entire suit; it means the claim in respect of the mesne profits. KEWAL KISHAN SINGH v. SOOKHARI I. L. There is no analogy between interest awarded under s. 209 of the Code and mesne profits claimed and awarded under ss. 211 and 212. Interest may be awarded under s. 209 as an inducement to prompt satisfaction of the decree and as a penalty for non-compliance with it. ——— and s. 28 — Finality of decision of Court on question of Court-fee. The decision of the Court on a question of the Court-fee payable on a plaint or memorandum of appeal which is to be "final as between the parties to the suit" must be a decision made between the parties on the record and after they had an opportunity of being heard, and not a mere decision based upon the report of a Munsarim before the plaint or memorandum of appeal is filed, and therefore before any parties are before the Court. 1. ——— s. 19 D—Act XIII of 1875, s. 6—Exemption from probate duty—Joint family—Conveyance to four members of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law as tenants-in-common—Survivorship. The deceased, who was a member of a joint Hindu family governed by Mitakshara law, left a will, of which he appointed his brothers the executors and trustees. The brothers as executors applied for probate, but claimed exemption from the payment of probate-duty on the ground that the property was "joint ancestral property which would pass by survivorship." The petition stated that in the lifetime of the testator he and his brothers, out of the income of the ancestral estate, purchased from the Corporation of Calcutta some plots of land which were conveyed to them as tenants-in-common; that the effect of this was to vest an undivided one-fourth share in the testator, which on his death would pass not to the remaining co-parceners under the rule of survivorship, but to this legal representatives; and that, in order that effect might be given to the rule of survivorship, it was necessary to obtain probate. Held, that the property, though conveyed to the brothers as tenants-in-common, vested in them as trustees for the benefit of all the co-parceners, and consequently was not liable to duty. In the goods of POKURMULL AUGURWALLAH

He left three sons. The sons applied for letters of administration limited to one share only valued at R275 and their application was granted. Subsequently they applied for letters of administration with respect to all the shares, except the one for which limited letters of administration had already been granted and claimed exemption from stamp duty. The question arose as to whether they were entitled to the exemption. Held, that the property with respect to which the letters of administration were sought being property held in trust by the deceased for the joint family, the property was entitled to exemption from the Court-fee. Held, further, that the exception of trust estates from the payment of ad valorem Court-fee is not conditional on the circumstance that there had been a previous grant of probate or letters of administration on which a Court-fee had been paid. The exemption has reference to the character of the property and not to the procedure adopted. The Collector of Ahmedabad v. *Savchand, I. L. Bombay and the other with a Commercial Company. Both the Bank and the Company refused to pay these sums unless letters of administration were obtained. Letters of administration were accordingly obtained in respect of these portions of the estate of the decesaed, and a sum of R207-2-0 was paid as duty thereon under Art. 11, Sch. I, of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870). Subsequently an application was made for a refund of this amount on the ground that the property in respect of which it had been paid was the joint property of the deceased and his sons and had passed to the latter by survivorship, and that, therefore, under s. 19D of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), no duty was chargeable. Held, that the refund could not be allowed. The section only applies where probate or letters of administration have already been granted on which the Court-fee has been paid. In such case no further duty is payable in respect of property held by the deceased as trustee. But where no duty has been paid, the section does not apply. Here no letters of administration had been granted, other than those in respect of which the refund was applied for. Therefore there were no letters on which the Court-fee had been paid so as to bring the case within the section and to entitle the present letters of administration to exemption. 1. ——— Plaint insufficiently stamped —Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 54, 56—Dismissal of suit—Rejection of plaint—Court Fees Act, ss. 9, 10, 11. When a memorandum of appeal, which, when tendered, was insufficiently stamped, has subsequently been sufficiently stamped, the affixing of the full stamps cannot have a retrospective effect so as to validate the original presentation unless it has been done by order made under the second paragraph of s. 28 of the Court Fees Act. In the case of a High Court, such an order can be made only by a Judge and by him only, in cases " of mistake or inadvertence." These words mean mistake or inadvertence on the part of the Court or its officers, and not on the part of the appellant or his advisers. The expression " head of the office " in s. 28 does not refer to the head of the office of a Court, or at all events to the head of the office of a High Court, acting not as such, but as a taxing officer ; but it refers to the head of a public office, such as the Board of Revenue. Ss. 9, 10, and 11 of the Court Fees Act are not in conflict with s. 28, nor are ss. 9, 10, 11, and 28 read together in conflict with s. 54 of the Civil Procedure Code. Cases within s. 10 or s. 11 of the Act would arise only where, through mistake or inadvertence of the Court, a plaint which subsequently was discovered to be insufficiently stamped had been received, filed, or used in the Court ; and cls. (a) and (b) of s. 54 of the Code are similarly related to s. 28 of the Act, and were not intended to cut down or limit its provisions. The " dismissal " of a suit under s. 10 or s. 11 of the Act has the same effect as that provided by s. 56 of the Code in the case of " rejection " of a plaint under s. 54. The suit was dismissed, and an appeal was preferred by the plaintiff to the District Court, on which R10 were also paid as stamp duty. The appeal was dismissed, whereupon plaintiff preferred a second appeal, upon which he paid R150 as stamp duty. On its being objected that the second appeal could not be entertained on the ground that insufficient stamp duty had been paid on the plaint and in the the lower Appellate Court : Held, that, inasmuch as the plaint had been filed and used without being properly stamped, through a mistake of law as to the Court-fee payable, the case was within s. 28 of the Court Fees Act. An order was accordingly made by the High Court for a Court-fee of R150 to be paid on the plaint and on the memorandum of first appeal, within a specified time. The suit was dismissed by the District Munsif, and plaintiff appealed to the District Court, paying a similar duty on his memorandum of appeal. The District Court dismissed the appeal, whereupon plaintiff filed a second appeal, paying stamp duty thereon R50. On objection being taken in the High Court that the second appeal could not be entertained because of the insufficient payment of stamp duty in the lower Courts, the High Court held that the proper Court-fee payable on the plaint and on the memorandum of appeal was R150, and ordered, under s. 28 of the Court-fees Act, that such fees be paid within twenty-one days. On the attorney seeking to get the stamps punched, the punching officer refused to punch them. The Registrar wrote to the attorney to state the special circumstances in writing, to enable him to make the necessary orders for punching. The attorney, without complying with this request, claimed it as a matter of indulgence to him, and applied to the Court to have the plaint admitted and the stamps punched. Held, that the punching officer, noticing the irregularity, was fully justified in refusing to punch the stamps. Held, also, that mere intimation from the Registrar did not confer the indulgence which the Registrar could extend under the rules, and that the solicitor should have placed the circumstances on paper, to entitle him to the same. The term "value" in the Act apparently means market value, and the market value of mortgaged property is the equity of redemption. An executor having applied for probate in respect of property which was alleged to be charged and mortgaged in excess of its value, no fee was charged for the probate of the will. A mere denial on the part of the defendant as to plaintiff's title and possession does not convert the suit into one for declaration of title and recovery of possession ; the plaintiff is entitled to maintain a suit for partition, if his possession to some part of the joint property is admitted or established, but if it is established that he is not in possession at all of any portion of the joint property, that there has been a complete ouster, he must sue for recovery of possession and partition and pay ad valorem Court-fees upon a plaint appropriately framed for the purpose. In a suit to have it declared that the property belonged to the plaintiff : Held, that it was a suit in which consequential relief was asked for, and that the ad valorem duty prescribed by Sch. 4. ——— Suits brought to set aside or restore attachment—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 246—Summary decision—Limitation Act, 1871, Art. 15 (1877, Art. 13)—Interpretation of Acts—Valuation of suits. Suits brought to set aside or to restore an attachment upon a house in pursuance of the permission given in s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code may be regarded either as " suits to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed " so as to fall within s. 1, cl. 4, Art. (c), of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), or as suits to obtain or set aside a summary decision or order, in which case the stamp duty payable would be that prescribed by Art. 17, cl. 1, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act. The Court Fees Act being a fiscal enactment, it is the duty of the Courts to treat such suits as belonging to the latter class (it being the more favourable for the suitor), and to impose fees accordingly. Decisions under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, as to the removal or retention of attachments, are " summary decisions or orders " within the meaning of Art. 17, cl. 1, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870). The words " summary decision or order " in this clause of the Court Fees Act mean decision or order not made in a regular suit or appeal. The construction which has been given to these words, or nearly similar words, in the Limitation Acts (e.g., Act IX of 1871, Sch. II, Art. 15 ; and Act XV of 1877, Sch. II, Art. 13) affords no guide to their construction in the Court Fees Act. When Acts are in pari materia, they may be treated as forming a Code, and may be read together ; but when this is not so, the construction which has been put upon one cannot be relied upon as a guide to the construction of another. The valuation of suits for the purpose of jurisdiction is perfectly distinct from their valuation for the fiscal purpose of Court-fees. Therefore Court Fees Acts, which are fiscal enactments, are not to be resorted to for construing enactments which fix the valuation of suits for the purpose of determining jurisdiction. Motichand Jaichand v. Dadabhai Pestonjee, 11 Bom. 186, explained.

5. ——— Stamp—Valuation of suit—Summary decision. The plaintiff had attached certain immoveable property in execution of a decree against a third party. The attachment was removed on application by the defendant under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, whereupon the plaintiff sued for a declaration that the property in dispute belonged to his judgment-debtor, and was liable to be attached and sold under his decree. The plaint, which did not state any amount as the value of the claim, bore a R10 stamp. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaint ought to have been stamped according to the value of the plaintiff's claim. Held, by the High Court on appeal, that the plaint was properly stamped under Sch. II, Art. 17, cl. 1, of Act VII of 1870, as the suit was a suit to set aside a summary decision of a Civil Court not established by Letters Patent. SADASHIV YESHWANT v. ATMARAM SAKARAM

The plaintiff's mother died pending the determination of the objection, having devised her property to the plaintiffs. They succeeded to the same, and certain other property, which also had been transferred to their mother in lieu of her dower-debt, having been also attached in execution of the same decree, the plaintiffs objected to the attachment. The Court executing the decree passed orders disallowing both objections. Upon these allegations the plaintiffs claimed to set aside both orders. They paid with reference to cl. 1, Art. 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, a court-fee of R20 on their plaint, but the Court of first instance held that this was not sufficient, and that the court-fee should be calculated on the amount of the decree in execution of which the property had been attached. Held, that, looking at the nature of the reliefs sought, cl. i, Art. 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, was applicable, and that a R10 stamp in respect of each order sought to be set aside was payable. Dayachand Nemchand v. *Hemchand Dharamchand, I. L. The objection was disallowed, and she thereupon brought a suit with reference to the provisions of s. 181 (b) of the Rent Act, (i) to establish her right to the property; (ii) to set aside the order passed on her objection. Held, that, looking at the nature of the reliefs sought, cls. 4. ——— Valuation of suit for declaratory decree—Consequential relief—Court Fees Act, 1870, s. 7, cl. 4, and s. 17. A suit praying merely for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to require the defendants to account to him, and to permit him to inspect their books, is simply a suit for a declaratory decree without consequential relief, and falls within Art. 17, cl. 3 of Sch. II of Act VII of 1870. A suit praying for such a declaration as the above, and also for a positive order in the nature of a mandatory injunction for the production of the defendants' books and property in their hands, or a suit praying for such declaration as the above, and also for a positive decree for an account to be taken by the Court, and for the production of the books and property, would range under s. 7, cl. 4, Art. (c) of Act VII of 1870, as being a suit "to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed," and also within Art. (d) of the same section, as being a suit "to obtain an injunction;" and a suit of the third species described above would fall under Art. (f) of the same clause, as being a suit "for accounts." Quære: Whether in the case of a suit for a declaration of the right of the plaintiff to an account, and to inspection of the defendants' books, and for a mandatory injunction for the production of those books, or of a suit for such declaration and for a positive decree for the taking of an account by the Court, and the production of the defendants' books, the plaint would by virtue of s. 17 of Act VII of 1870, require separate stamps under Arts. (d) and (f) of cl. 4, s. 7, or be sufficiently covered by the stamp under Art. (c) of the same clause; and whether, assuming the declaration and the account each to require a stamp, the prayer for an injunction or order for the production of books is not merely ancillary to, and not a distinct subject from, the taking of an account. Quære: Whether the provision in s. 7, cl. 4, of Act VII of 1870, that the amount of the fee payable in suits falling within that clause shall be computed "according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint," is so inconsistent with that portion of s. 31 of Act VIII of 1859 which permits the Court receiving the plaint to revise the valuation of the claim as to render that portion of s. 31 of Act VIII of 1859 inoperative in suits within s. 7, cl. 4, of Act VII of 1870, notwithstanding the concluding passage in that clause. Quære: Whether the concluding passage in cl. 4, s. 7 of Act VII of 1870, is too express to admit of a limitation of the power of the Judge, and leaves him the right to revise the valuation placed on suits under cl. 4 by the plaintiff. But, assuming this to be so, it would, generally, not be advisable that the Judge should enhance the valuation on the reception of the plaint. The fee payable under s. 7, cl. 4, of Act VII of 1870 is according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint, and not the value of the subject-matter of the plaint. II of Act VII of 1870, was not sufficient; but the plaint should bear a stamp of a value proportionate to the subject-matter of the suit. DELROOS BANOO BEGUM v. ASHGUR ALLY KHAN . 15 B. L. 10. ——— Disqualification to contract—Beng. Reg. LII of 1803. On a consideration of the provisions of Regulation LII of 1803 (the provisions of Regulation X of 1793 are similar), it was held that the mere fact that the Court of Wards has charge of the estates of a female did not necessarily disqualify her from contracting debts. That Regulation must be construed strictly, the provisions requiring the Collector to report to the Board a female as disqualified, and the subsequent procedure thereon should be strictly carried out, as not mere matters of form, but necessary preliminaries, before the female can be considered disqualified. From the absence of the observance of those provisions in the case of R A, and the conduct of the Government officials representing the Court of Wards, the custody of the Court of Wards of her estates was held to be of such a character as did not render her a disqualified female incapable of contracting debts. The case having been framed incorrectly, it was, under the circumstances, remanded for trial by the High Court under special directions. MAHOMED ZAHOOR ALI KHAN RUTTA KOOER

11. ——— *Beng. Reg. An estate consisting of lakhiraj lands was duly placed under the management of the Court of Wards, the proprietress, a Mahomedan, being disqualified under the Regulation. This ward having then become a party to a mortgage of such lands to secure repayment of money advanced to her, it was held that she neither bound herself nor charged the estate. This case distinguished from Mahomed Zahoor Ali Khan v. Rutta Koer, 11 Moo. I. A. 478, where the proprietress, no intention to treat her as disqualified having been shown, was adjudged capable of contracting, though the Court of Wards was in possession of her estate. On the facts of this case it was also held that, although the Court had given to this ward an authority, under certain limitations of which the plaintiff had notice, to borrow money for a special purpose, there had not been such a holding out to the world of her

Provinces Land Revenue Acts, XIX of 1873, ss. 194-195; and VIII of 1879, s. 20—Disqualified proprietor. M, a female proprietor, brought a suit to recover possession of certain lands, which were in the hands of the Collector, as manager of the Court of Wards, on the allegations that she had placed the property in the hands of the Court some years previously, because she was not at that time in a position to manage it herself, but that she was now capable of managing it, and desired to get it back. The suit was dismissed, and the plaintiff appealed on the ground, inter alia, that inasmuch as she was not a "disqualified proprietor" within the meaning of Act, XIX of 1873 (North-West Provinces Land Revenue Act) the Court of Wards had no jurisdiction to take the property, and that its possession was merely the result of an arrangement to which she was a consenting party, and which she now desired to terminate. Held, that, with reference to the provisions of Act XIX of 1873 and Act VII of 1879 (North-West Provinces Land Revenue Acts), the suit as brought was not maintainable, inasmuch as there was no evidence that the plaintiff had obtained the previous sanction of the Local Government to the release of the property from the superintendence of the Court of Wards, as required by s. 20 of the latter Act. Held, also, that the plaintiff could not be allowed in appeal entirely to change the nature of the grounds upon which she alleged herself to be entitled to claim relief, and that hence she could not now raise the plea that the Court of Wards, in taking the property under its management, had acted without jurisdiction. The expression "local Government" in ss. 194 and 195 of Act XIX of 1873, and s. 20 of Act VIII of 1879, means the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces. that R, as heir, had inherited all B's property, and that he, M, was entitled to have the property attached and sold in satisfaction of his decree. The only defendants were A H, manager under the Court of Wards, and R. The Subordinate Judge gave plaintiff a decree, declaring that D was not the legally adopted son of B. This was appealed from. Held, that the Judge had no power to make any such order as that of the 28th March 1872 in regard to the Court of Wards. What he had power to do under Act XL of 1858, s. 12, was to direct the Collector to take charge of the estate, and it would then have become the duty of the Collector to appoint a manager and a guardian in the same manner, etc., as if the minor's property and person were subject to the Court of Wards. Held, that the minor's interest were not properly represented before the Subordinate Judge, whose decree, therefore, could not stand so as to affect the minor, and that the minor must be made a party strictly in the manner prescribed by Bengal Act IV of 1870, s. 69. VIII of the Oudh Land-revenue Act, 1876, was a personal disqualification, and extended to all dealings of the disqualified proprietor with any property, wheresoever situate; nor was this disability affected by the fact that this particular property had not been specifically taken over as part of the disqualified proprietor's estate by the Court of Wards.

A residuary legatee does not become the "proprietor" of the estate until the administration has been completed and the residue ascertained and made over by the executrix to him. The Court of Wards Act was never intended to and the language thereof does not warrant the construction that it should have power to override private rights, such as the wishes of testators and proprietors generally in desiring and directing that their estate should vest in and be managed by an executor or in creating a trust inter vivos for the benefit of an infant. When public officers are sued not in their admitted official capacity but as individual trespassers, no notice under s. 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure is necessary. Even in a case where such a notice would be otherwise necessary, so far as the suit sought relief by an injunction to restrain the commission of an act, no notice under that section would be necessary. An acquisition by an executrix for an estate, out of the assets of the estate, is a part thereof, even if the acquisition has taken place after a declaration by the Court of Wards taking over the management of the estate. The High Court may entertain an action in respect of immoveable property, provided that a portion of such property is within the jurisdiction. Where, although but a portion of the estate regarding which certain declarations and injunctions are sought in an action, is within its jurisdiction, the High Court has power to grant the same declarations and injunction as regards the whole estate. Where there had been undoubted disturbance of plaintiff's possession some rents having been collected and appropriated by the defendant and the plaintiff's establishment directed to obey the order of the defendant, but no mutation of names having been effected, the rents had been collected and money orders cashed in the name of the plaintiff, and her establishment taken over by the defendant in the plaintiff's absence and without her consent, to which the plaintiff at once protested, and she also made certain collections on her own behalf. Held, that the possession of the estate had really remained in the plaintiff; and there had been a continuing trespass, for which the plaintiff was entitled to have an injunction and it was not necessary for her to institute an action in ejectment against the defendant. It is not for the Court of Wards to determine whether there has been maladministration of an estate by an executrix, and on its own determination, take possession thereof on behalf of an infant residuary legatee before the administration is complete. It is not essential that the defendants should all actually commit trespass to be liable to the plaintiff; a trespass committed by a subordinate officer under orders from the superior officers is in substance the act of them all and both the subordinate as well as the superior officers are liable to the plaintiff as trespassers. ——— —Transfer of property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 55, 59—What amounts to a "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of section—Contract Act—(IX of 1872), s. 20—Mistake does not prevent the party from claiming the protection of a special covenant—Want of attestation as laid down in s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act will not bar the personal remedy. A, who had brought a suit to recover the amount due on a mortgage executed to him, assigned to B, for valuable consideration, all his claims under the mortgage deed and in the suit brought by A. The assignment contained a covenant that "A, his executors or administrators shall not be liable for any defect in the claim hereby transferred and assigned or for any sums of money that may not be recovered." Subsequent to the assignment, B was added as a co-plaintiff in the suit brought by A and it was discovered that the mortgage executed to A was inoperative as it was attested by only one witness and the suit was withdrawn. B filed a suit against A for a declaration that the contract of assignment was void and for a return of the consideration paid. Held, that A was entitled to claim the benefit of the covenant, which exempted him from any liability, even though both A and B acted under the mistaken belief that the mortgage was valid and that A was not bound to refund the consideration received. Per SIR ARNOLD WHITE, C.J.—The covenant is a "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act which will negative the statutory covenant of title under the section. Per SIR S. SUBRAHMANIA AYYAR, J.—Non-compliance with the rule laid down in s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act as to attestation does not render the personal covenant void. Madras Deposit and Benefit Society, Limited v. *Oonnamalai Ammal I. 1. ——— Transfer of the land. S, by an instrument in writing, duly registered, agreed, for valuable consideration, for himself, his heirs and successors, to pay his wife, A, a certain sum monthly out of the income of certain land, and not to alienate such land without stipulating for the payment of such allowance out of its income. He subsequently gave L a usufructuary mortgage of the land subject to the payment of the allowance. L gave R a sub-mortgage of the land agreeing orally with R to continue the payment of the allowance himself. Held, in a suit by A against L and R for the arrears of the allowance, that A was not affected by an agreement between L and R as to the payment of the allowance, and R being in possession of the land was bound to pay the allowance. The representatives of the vendor sued M and B to recover arrears of malikana. Held, without expressing any opinion as to whether registration of the deed of sale operated as notice to all the world, or whether notice of the terms of the deed was necessary to bind B and assuming B to have had no such notice in fact, that if he had searched the register, he would have ascertained

COVENANT TO RENEW.

——— Settlement—Amalnama. A, a zamindar, entered into negotiations with Government for settlement of certain lands. Pending the settlement, A sublet to B and granted him an amalnama for one year, and covenanted therein that whatever term of settlement he might obtain from Government, he would grant to B a pottah for the corresponding term. The negotiations with A were broken off, and Government settled with C on condition that he should abide by the above amalnama. Held, that C was bound by the covenant to renew; the amalnama did not require to be registered. The Magistrate found on the evidence that there had been no sale under Act I of 1871, and convicted the accused of criminal breach of trust, and sentenced him under s. 406 of the Penal Code. Held, that the conviction was illegal. The prisoner was charged with criminal breach of trust as a servant. The defence was that he had purchased wood and made advances on that account ; but this defence was proved to be false. It was urged before the High Court that the conviction would not be sustained as the accused was a partner with the prosecutor: Held by JACKSON, J., that the finding of the Magistrate and Sessions Judge on the evidence was to the effect that the prisoner was not a partner, but a servant ; that such finding could not be interfered with by the High Court as a Court of revision, unless there was a mistake in law ; that the finding was correct in law ; that the defence of the prisoner could not be taken to mean to say that he was a partner, but merely that he claimed a small share in the profits, and that such claim did not make him a partner, an agent's remuneration being a share in the profits not constituting the agent a partner. Held by KEMP and MITTER, JJ. (releasing the prisoner), that, though the allowance of a portion of the profits or goods does not destroy the relation of master and servant, the accused in this case distinctly pleaded he was a partner, and not only that he was entitled to a share in the profits ; that the lower Courts did not specifically decide that the accused was a servant ; and that the prosecutor's remedy was a civil suit for an account. In the matter of LALL CHAND ROY 9 W. 19. ——— Master and Servant—Servant entrusted with moneys for payment to tradesman of account settled with master for a specific sum—Gratuity of tradesman to servant—Right of master to benefit of gratuity—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 405, 409. When a master entrusts his servant with money for the payment of an open account, i.e., an account of which the items have never been checked or settled, and the tradesman makes the servant a present, and the transaction amounts to a taxation of the bill and a reduction of the price by the servant, the latter obtains the reduction for his master's benefit, the money in his hands always remains the master's property, and, if he appropriates it, he commits criminal breach of trust. But where the master himself has settled the account with the tradesman for a specific sum, and sends the servant with money, and the servant, after making the payment, accepts a present from the tradesman, in that case the servant does not commit criminal breach of trust, inasmuch as the money is given to him by a person whom he believes to have a right to give it, though it may be that, according to the strict equitable doctrines of the Court of Chancery, he is bound to account to the master for the money. *Hay's Case, In re Canadian Oil Works Corporation, L. 20. ——— Penal Code, s. 408—Criminal breach of trust by a servant—Criminal misappropriation. An accused person who was in the service of zamindars, and whose duty it was to pay into the Collectorate Government revenue due in respect of their estates, immediately before the due date of a kist received from them a certain sum of money with no specific instruction as to its application. On receipt of that money, he paid a portion only of it into the Collectorate on account of the revenue, and having done so, he then altered the challan given back to him showing the amount actually paid, and made it appear that a much larger amount had been paid in than was the fact. This challan he sent to his employer for the purpose of showing the application of the money. He was charged (amongst other offences) with criminal breach of trust as a servant (s. 408 of the Penal Code) in respect of the difference between the amount actually paid into the treasury and the amount shown to have been paid in by the altered challan. The accused was convicted on all the charges. It was contended that the charge under s. 408 was not sustainable, inasmuch as the money was not alleged to have been sent to the accused for the specific purpose of paying the Government revenue, and that the accounts between him and his employers had not been adjusted, and that it was not shown whether at the date of the alleged breach of trust the accused was indebted to his employer or the reverse. Held, that, as the money was sent to the accused immediately before the kist day, and the challan was sent to the employers showing, in its altered state, the amount really payable as revenue which nearly covered the whole amount remitted, it was reasonable to infer that the accused was aware of the implied purpose for which the money was remitted, and as he deposited a very much smaller amount than that remitted, and tried to pass of the altered challan as genuine, there was a dishonest misappropriation of the difference sufficient to constitute the offence under s. 408. Before it was put up to auction, the rice was found to be in a rotten condition. The fact that that other person has brought a suit to recover the amount claimed by him against the accused is a complete answer to the charge of criminal breach of trust against the accused, and to the findings of the Courts that the claim made by that other person was a false claim. A user of property comes within the definition of the offence when such user causes substantial or appreciable loss to the owner of the property or gain to the accused. *High Court Proceedings, 18th September 1866, 3 Mad. Instead of doing this, the accused brought some of them to Bow Bazar in Calcutta. Held, that the act of the accused did not amount to criminal breach of trust under s. 408 of the Penal Code. *Empress v. He was not charged with three offences, but with one offence under s. 409 of the Penal Code, and was convicted of one offence and sentenced to one term of imprisonment:—Held, that the charge as framed was not contrary to law, it being in accordance with ss. 222, sub-s. 3. ——— Ex-communication by Roman Catholic priest—Penal Code, ss. 190, 503, 508—Criminal proceedings stayed until complainant established the illegality of the priest's acts in a Civil Court. Where the exercise of ecclesiastical jurisdiction is plainly ultra vires, or otherwise unsanctioned by the ordinances of a religious society, or where such ordinances controvert the general law, and, in either case, consequences result which the criminal law was intended to restrain, the Criminal Courts are not at liberty to decline jurisdiction. A Roman Catholic complained to a Magistrate that he had been threatened with an illegal sentence of excommunication and had been excommunicated by the ecclesiastical authorities, with a view to prevent him from asserting his legal rights in defending a civil suit concerning the property of a church. Held, that, under the circumstances, the proper course was for the Magistrate to postpone the trial till the complainant proved in a Civil Court the illegality of the action of the ecclesiastical authorities. In re DECRUZ . 4. ——— Attempt to commit offence—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 503, 507, 511. The accused sent a fabricated petition to the Revenue Commissioner, S D, containing a threat that, if a certain forest officer were not removed elsewhere, he would be killed. The accused was charged with the offence of criminal intimidation under s. 507 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860). The Sessions Judge found that the Commissioner had neither official nor personal interest in the forest officer. He therefore acquitted the accused of the offence of criminal intimidation, but convicted him of an attempt to commit the offence punishable under s. 507, and sentenced him to four months' simple imprisonment. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that, as the person to whom the petition was addressed was not interested in the person threatened, the act intended and done by the accused did not amount to the offence of criminal intimidation within the meaning of s. 503 of the Penal Code. Per WEST, J.—"The offence of criminal intimidation, as defined, seems to require both a person to be threatened and another in whom he is specially interested. Then there must be the intent to cause alarm to the former by a threat to him of injury to the latter. The intent itself might be complete, though it could not be effected. But the existence of the interest seems essential to the offence, as also and equally to the attempt at the offence, since otherwise the attempt would be to do something not constituting an offence." Per BIRDWOOD, J.—"No criminal liability can be incurred, under the Penal Code, by an attempt to do an act which, if done, would not be an offence against the Code. In the present case, therefore, if the accused was not guilty of committing criminal intimidation, because the act intended and done by him lacked an ingredient of that offence, he could not be guilty of an attempt at that offence." 6. ——— Threat to ruin another by cases—"Injury"—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 44, 503 and 506. In order to convict a person of criminal intimidation under s. 506 of the Penal Code, it must be found that there was a threat by him to another person of injury to his person, reputation or property, or to the person or reputation of anyone in whom that person is interested. Where the petitioner, who threatened to ruin the complainant by cases, was convicted of criminal intimidation under s. 506 of the Penal Code: Held, that the conviction could not stand. Had the threat been to ruin the complainant by false cases, the offence of criminal intimidation would have been committed; but as the threat was to ruin him by cases, it could not be assumed that by cases were meant false cases. If the cases were not false, the mere fact that they were instituted for the purpose of prosecuting the complainant, would not bring them within the definition of the term "injury." On a charge being preferred against him, under s. 187 of the Indian Penal Code, of intentionally omitting to assist a public servant in the execution of his duty: Held, that the accused was not guilty of an offence under s. 187. Assuming that a person called upon to attend and witness a search, under s. 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is under a legal obligation to attend the search and sign the search list, the "assistance" which a person is bound, by the earlier part of s. 187 of the Penal Code, to render is ejusdem generis with the various forms of assistance referred to in the latter part of the section. It must have some direct personal relation to the execution of the duty by the public officer. The

1. ——— Security for keeping the peace—Evidence as to likelihood of breach of the peace. Held, that facts which might be taken to establish the probability of certain persons disturbing the public tranquillity at a particular annually recurring festival, would afford no ground, after such festival had passed without the public tranquillity having been disturbed, for binding over such persons to keep the peace with a view to the possibility of their creating a disturbance at the next recurrence of the festival. Uma Churn Santra v. *Beni Madhub Roy, 7 C. 2. ——— Security to keep the peace, order for—Persons likely to commit breach of the peace—Facts justifying order—Misjoinder, if it vitiates proceeding—Illegality—Cure. The facts from which, for the purposes of s. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it may be reasonably inferred that the persons sought to be bound down are likely to disturb the public peace, must be facts of a definite nature and must show that such persons are individually and not collectively connected with them. No hard-and-fast rule can be laid down applicable to all cases and each case must be determined upon its own circumstances. Empress v. Abdul Kadir, I. L. R. 9 All. 452, followed. The main principles applicable to a criminal trial regarding joinder of charges and the joint trial of accused persons should be applied to enquiries under s. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Where both the parties to a proceeding under s. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, were tried together (some amongst them having also been examined as witnesses in the case), and were bound down in the result of that trial: Held, that there was misjoinder of the nature condemned in Subramania Iyer v. King-Emperor, I. L. R. 25 Mad. 61, such as could not be cured by s. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Bachu Mullah v. Siaram Singh, I. L. R. 14 Calc. 358, referred to. 3. ——— Wrongful act—Putni sale—Reg. VIII of 1819—Dur-putnidar under the defaulting putnidar resisting the purchaser. A putni taluk was sold under Reg. VIII of 1819. The revenue authorities and the zamindars did everything that was necessary for them to do under the regulation to put the purchaser in possession. Nevertheless a dur-putnidar under the defaulting putnidar continued to be in possession and insisted upon collecting rents from the raiyats. Held, that such act on the part of the dur-putnidar was wrongful and he was rightly bound down to keep the peace under s. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, when it was found that his act was likely to cause a breach of the peace. The fact that the dur-putnidar had brought a suit to set aside the sale made no difference, inasmuch as the effect of the putni Regulation is to render such act unlawful, until such time as the sale shall have been set aside. The jurisdiction of the Magistrate to proceed under s. 107 is not ousted by the fact that it appeared in the course of the inquiry that the dispute was one relating to the possession of land and that the apprehended breach of the peace was in consequence of that dispute—although ordinarily the more appropriate procedure in such cases is that provided by Chap. Evidence of association with bad characters against the accused in a proceeding under s. 110, Criminal Procedure Code, is evidence of reputation, but such reputation can only be based upon association with proved bad characters and not with reputed bad characters. Previous convictions are not substantive evidence in a case under s. 110, Criminal Procedure Code, though they may have an effect in deciding for what length of time the accused is to be bound down. Shaik Babu v. *Emperor, I. An order for cancelling a bond cannot be made before it has been executed. S. 135, Criminal Procedure Code, gives the person against whom the conditional order is made the right to adopt either of these alternatives. If he adopts the former alternative, the Magistrate is bound to take action under s. 137, and if he adopts the second alternative, then the Magistrate is bound to take action under s. 138. Both ss. 137 and 138 are imperative in their terms. The Magistrate has no discretion in the matter. Where the petitioners against whom a conditional order under s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, was made, applied to the Magistrate for showing cause against the order and also for the appointment of a jury but in the end elected to proceed with the application for the appointment of a jury, but the jury failing to submit their verdict within the ample time granted them by the Magistrate, the Magistrate proceeded under s. 141 to make the order absolute: Held, the Magistrate was justified in making the order absolute without taking evidence under s. 137, the petitioners not having taken any action, after the jury had failed to perform their duty, to move the Magistrate for taking evidence in

The object of s. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, is not that orders should be made prescribing the holding of hâts indefinitely within a certain area for two months. The proper way of preventing a breach of the peace is to proceed under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code. BIDHU RANJAN MAZUMDAR v. RAMESH CHANDRA RAI (1906) 11 C. W. N. 223

Where, therefore, a Magistrate passed an order directing the second party not to interfere with the first party in the cultivation of his khas lands or the collection of rents from his under-tenants, and it did not appear from the proceedings that he was of opinion that immediate prevention or speedy remedy was necessary and the order made did not state the material facts of the case: Held, that the order was bad and must be set aside. 7. ——— Limitation of time—Prohibitory order without express limitation of time—Legality of the order. An order under s. 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not bad because it does not state that its operation is confined to two months, or some shorter period, from the making thereof. Unless there is something in the order which shows that it was intended that it should remain in force for more than two months, it must be presumed that the order is to be limited to two months as required by cl. (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, was not published in some conspicuous place at or near the subject of dispute: Held, that the order passed should be set aside inasmuch as the provisions in cl. (3) of s. 145 are of a mandatory character, and the failure to publish a copy of the order in accordance with the provisions of the latter part of cl. (3) affects the jurisdiction of the Court. Held, further, that the proceedings drawn up in the case did not show that there was such an immediate danger of a breach of the peace as would justify proceedings under s. 145. —Magistrate's duty—Exparte proceeding. Where in a proceeding under s. 145, an allegation was made by the first party of the non-receipt of the notice of the date of trial and of the copy of the order under cl. (1) of that section, but the Magistrate without making any investigation as to the truth or otherwise of the allegation proceeded to determine the case upon the written statement of the opposite party and passed an order in favour of that party: Held, that, before proceeding with the matter, the Magistrate was bound to be satisfied that the notice of the proceeding and the copy of the order drawn up by him were duly served on the first party. Where a party had obtained summonses upon his witnesses, and on the failure of some of them to appear, applied for fresh summonses against them, which the Magistrate refused, and where it was further alleged that he had refused to allow a witness to prove certain documents: Held, that there was nothing to show that the absent witnesses could not have been made to attend without the assistance of the Court, nor whether they were material witnesses, nor that any questions were put to the witness which were improperly disallowed, and that the party was not, therefore, shown to have been prejudiced. 16. ——— Enquiry to be held before issuing preliminary order under—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Failure of jurisdiction where Magistrate refuses to receive evidence which party is entitled to adduce under s. 145 (5). In order that a Magistrate may have jurisdiction to act under s.145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he must be satisfied from a Police report, or other information, that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land, etc. Where there is no police report the statement of interested parties ought to be received with great caution and ought not to be acted upon, unless they are corroborated by the testimony of less interested persons. The opposite party also ought to be given an opportunity of cross-examining the party making such statements before the Magistrate takes any action on them. Under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a party who is required by a preliminary order to attend at the Magistrate's Court, is entitled to show that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists or had existed, and it is not open to such Magistrate to refuse to receive such evidence, when tendered. Where the Magistrate refuses to receive such evidence his order will be set aside as having been passed without jurisdiction. Per DAVIES, J.—A Magistrate acts ultra vires in clubbing together disputes relating to a large number of villages and treating them as one. Each village must stand on its own footing and the Magistrate should satisfy himself that a dispute existed in respect of all the villages. He should ascertain, as regards each village, which party was in possession at the date of the order and confirm that possession. The object of Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure being to procure prompt action to avert breaches of the peace the Legislature could not have contemplated under that chapter wholesale proceedings in regard to a large number of villages which, if the procedure above stated be adopted, would entail a prolonged enquiry. 17. ——— Dispute concerning land—Omission to publish a copy of the initiatory order at or near the subject of dispute—Jurisdiction—Procedure—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898). s. 145, cls. (1) and (3)—Revision—Power of High Court to interfere in revision—Prejudice—Charter Act (24 and 25 Vict. c. 104), s. 15. Where the Magistrate drew up an initiatory order under s. 145, cl. (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, but omitted to direct the publication of a copy of it at or near the subject of dispute, and it was not so published in accordance with cl. (3) of that section: Held, that the provisions as to the publication of a copy of the order in s. 145, cl. (3) of the Code, is directory, and relates to a matter of procedure only and not of jurisdiction: that if cl. (1) of s. 145 has been complied with, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to deal with the case, and the mere fact that he omitted to have a copy of such order published by affixing it to some conspicuous place at or near the subject of dispute does not deprive him of jurisdiction, but is an irregularity in his procedure. The power of interference of the High Court in cases under s.145 of the Code is only under s. 15 of the Charter Act. It is discretionary and ought in such cases to be exercised with every caution. Where a lower Court has proceeded with irregularity the High Court should not interfere, unless it can be shown that some one has been materially prejudiced by such irregularity. If, however, the subordinate Court has acted without jurisdiction the High Court will interfere. Where the parties were duly served and appeared and the case was contested before the Magistrate, and it was only subsequently discovered by searching the records that a copy of the initiatory order had not been published locally and where it was not suggested that any one had been in the least prejudiced by the omission, it was held, that the High Court ought not to interfere under s. 15 of the Charter Act. Per GHOSE, J.—The Magistrate acquires jurisdiction when the conditions of cl. (1) have been fulfilled and cls. (3) and (4) lay down the procedure by which the jurisdiction is to be exercised, but the procedure prescribed is mandatory and not simply directory. When a Magistrate fails to comply with cl. (3) he does not act without jurisdiction, but illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction and the High Court has the power to interfere under the Charter Act. But such non-compliance is not an illegality, which makes it obligatory upon the Court to interfere, unless some prejudice to any party has been thereby occasioned. Janu Manjhi v. *Maniruddin 8 C. 18. ——— Police-report—Likelihood of breach of peace—Interference by High Court—Subject-matter of dispute not clearly defined—Trees, dispute as to. The High Court may interfere in a proceeding instituted by a Magistrate under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, when the police-report on which the proceeding is based states in the vaguest terms that each of the parties claims a certain right, and that inasmuch as both the parties are men of substance there might be a breach of the peace. 20. ——— Police-report stating possibility of a breach of the peace. Where proceedings under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, were instituted on a police-report which showed that the two parties were disputing about the possession of a tank and that they were big zemindars, and which stated that though there was nothing to show that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace, yet it was not impossible that there should be a breach of the peace: Held, that the police-report, as it is, cannot be and ought not to be the foundation of a proceeding under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The opinion expressed by the police-officer without sufficient materials ought not to be the ground for the institution of the proceedings. Every case in which the question as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace that should justify the initiation of proceedings under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, arises, must be judged on its own merits. 21. ——— Omission of Magistrate to state grounds for passing order is an irregularity and does not render the proceedings void, if no prejudice caused thereby. The omission of a Magistrate, in his order initiating proceedings under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to state the grounds on which he is satisfied that there was a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, is an irregularity, and will not, when the party is not prejudiced in the conduct of the inquiry by such omission, render the proceedings of the Magistrate void. Want of notice to one party in possession cannot be set up by another party who had noticeand who appeared in the proceedings. CHINNAPPUDAYAN, In the matter of. (1907) I. L. R. 30 Mad. 548

22. ——— Possession—Dispute concerning land—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Proper question for determination—Actual possession—Decision based not on oral evidence but on settlement proceedings. The only question, which a Magistrate has to decide in a proceeding under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is as to who is in actual possession of the disputed land. Where the Magistrate, while holding that the oral evidence of actual possession was in favour of one party, proceeded to discuss and decide as to the legal effect under the Bengal Survey Act, of a recent order of an Assistant Settlement Officer passed in an inquiry into a boundary dispute between the parties, awarding possession to the opposite party and also as to the maintainability under the circumstances of proceedings under s. 145 of the Code, the civil remedies available to the defeated party, the legality of the above order and his power to set the same aside and directed the first part to be maintained in possession in accordance with such order: Held, that the Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction in going into these matters instead of determining the question of actual possession on the evidence in the case. An order of such Magistrate based solely and substantially on evidence recorded by a Subordinate Magistrate is not an order based on legal evidence and is void as made without jurisdiction. *In re Baikant Kunar 3 C. Under that Code enquiry means not only an enquiry into an offence, but extends to enquiry into matters which are not offences. When in the course of a proceeding under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, one Magistrate is transferred and another comes in his place, the latter, if of competent jurisdiction, can deal with the proceeding under s. 350, Criminal Procedure Code. Where a Magistrate after drawing up a proceeding under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, issued an order for attachment of the disputed land till the disposal of the case and subsequently he postponed the proceeding sine die: Held, that the postponement sine die did not operate as a withdrawal of the order of attachment which continued in force till the disposal of the case. (5)—Transfer of a proceeding under s. 145—The power of Magistrate to quash proceeding upon transfer.* Where a proceeding under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code drawn up by a Deputy Magistrate was transferred by the District Magistrate to his own file and then summarily quashed: Held, that the District Magistrate could only quash the proceeding in accordance with the provisions of sub-s. (5), of s. 145 Criminal Procedure Code, on facts being brought to his notice which were sufficient to satisfy him that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed. That his order quashing the proceeding on the sole ground that he thought that the letter addressed to him by one of the parties contained an admission that the other party was in actual possession of the land in dispute, was without jurisdiction and should be set aside. Semble: If the District Magistrate after transferring to his own file a proceeding under s. 14, Criminal Procedure Code, drawn up by a Subordinate Magistrate, quashed the proceeding on a full consideration of all the facts and after hearing the objections, if any, of the parties, the High Court would not interfere with the order quashing the proceeding. (1): Held, that the drawing up of a formal order under sub-s. (1) was absolutely necessary to the initiation of proceedings under s. 145 and the omission to do so rendered them bad for want of jurisdiction. S. 145 does not contemplate that the question of actual possession should be delegated, even by the consent of the parties, to arbitration. It directs the Magistrate himself to receive the evidence produced by the parties, and to come to a decision in consideration thereof. BANWARI LALL MUKERJEE v. HRIDAY CHAKRAVARTI (1905)

The fact that on the date of the initiation of the proceedings under s. 145 of the Code there was a subsisting order under s. 144, the terms of which were not before the Court, passed against the landlords in a proceeding to which the tenants, through whom they claimed to be in possession, were not parties, does not justify the Court in setting aside the proceedings under s. 145, in respect of the same subject-matter of dispute, as without jurisdiction. A transfer by a first class Magistrate of a case under s. 145 erroneously and in good faith, does not vitiate the proceedings by reason of the provisions of s. 529 (f). Akbar Ali Khan v. *Domi Lal, 4 C. Where the Magistrate initiated proceedings under s. 145 on a police report on which he was satisfied that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace, and there was evidence on the record of a probability of such breach of the peace, the High Court refused to set aside the final order as without jurisdiction. Oral statements of witnesses to a police-officer, even though entered in the diary under s. 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code, are admissible under the provisions of s. 162 of that Code and of that section only, and the provisos as to the cross-examination of the police-officer under ss. 161 and 145 of the Evidence Act, which refer to his own statements, do not apply to the statements of the witnesses. The proper procedure is for the accused, at the time the witness, whose statement is so recorded, appears before the Court, to ask the Court to refer to such writing, and, if necessary, furnish the accused with copies. It is open to the defence to ask the police-officer or any other person whether certain statements were made to him by the witnesses for the purpose of impeaching their credit under s. 155 of the Evidence Act, but the police-officer cannot be asked to refresh his memory from diaries, which are inadmissible unless admitted under the provisions of s. 162 of the Code and used in the cross-examination of the witnesses. It would be quite improper to accept the police officer's perfunctory reading of his diary as proof of the statement. It is only when they have been properly brought in under the provisions of s. 162 that they can be subsequently proved by the police-officer under the provisions of the Evidence Act, if the witness denies making them. 3. ——— Confession, recording of, in presence of another Magistrate or person, and questioning of confessing prisoner by such Magistrate or person—Police custody, bearing of, on confession—Circumstances rendering confession invalid. Where at the foot of a confession recorded, there was a memorandum signed by the recording Magistrate to the effect that he believed it was voluntarily made and the Sessions Judge held not only that that was the case but was also convinced that the confessing statements were true and formed a good basis for conviction: Held, that that did not preclude an Appellate Court from inquiring for itself into the character of the confession; on the contrary, it was a duty clearly incumbent on the Court of Appeal to take into consideration the circumstances which led up to the confession when its truthfulness and spontaneity were questioned by the defence. Where it was found that directly or indirectly pressure was brought to bear upon the accused through his relatives to make a confession and that the Police interviewed the accused in hajut several times and the District Magistrate himself impressed upon the accused the advisability of making a confession and the accused was kept in hajut for a long time, a portion of which he had to spend in a solitary cell, and the confession was recorded in the immediate presence of the District Magistrate who was personally interested in the case against the accused and some answers were elicited from the accused by some incriminating questions put to him and the accused retracted the confession as soon as he got an opportunity to do so in Court: Held, that the confession was not voluntary and was not admissible in evidence against the accused. Where, in recording a confession, the only preliminary questions put to the accused were—"Do you know who I am? Any statement you make will be of your own free will. You are under no compulsion, I understand. What do you wish to say?" Held, that this was no compliance either with the letter or the spirit of the law on the vital point of questioning the accused before recording his confession. A Magistrate before recording the confession of an accused asked him several questions in order to satisfy himself that the confession was being voluntarily made, but omitted to ask whether the accused was brought from Police custody and it appeared that the accused was in Police custody for 8 days immediately before making the confession and that he was previous to this for a considerable period in hajut in a solitary cell, that he was confronted with another accused who had made a confession of a similar offence, that the Magistrate before recording the confession read the statements alleged to have been made by the accused to a police-officer, and during the recording of the confession, another Magistrate questioned the accused; and the confession was retracted as soon as the accused got an opportunity to do so in Court: Held, that the confession was not voluntarily made and was not admissible in evidence. When an accused person is brought before a Magistrate to get his confession recorded, it is highly irregular for the Magistrate to peruse the alleged statements of the accused made to and recorded by a police-officer, before proceeding to question the prisoner. Emperor v. Radhe Halwai, 7 C. W. N. 220, approved. The fact and duration of Police custody of a confessing accused has a material bearing on the question whether the confession is voluntary or not. There is no warrant or justification for the intervention of a third party as a questioner, directly or indirectly, of a confessing prisoner. 1. ——— Charter Act—Revocation of sanction—Power of High Court. Under sub-s. (6) of s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a petition by way of appeal lies to the High Court in every case in which a Civil or Criminal Court subordinate to it, within the meaning of sub-s. (7) (a) gives or refuses a sanction, whether in respect of an offence committed before it or of one committed before a Court subordinate to it, and, in the latter case, whether it gives a sanction refused by the Subordinate Court or revokes a sanction accorded by such Court. Under cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. (1), the sanction may be accorded in the first instance by the Court to which the Court in which the offence was committed is subordinate, even though no application for sanction has been made to the latter Court. For the purposes of cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. (1), a sanction accorded by the High Court would operate as a sanction accorded by a Court subordinate to it, such as the District Court. An order passed by an Appellate Court is, in law, the order which ought to have been passed by the Subordinate Court, and will, in consequence, have the same efficacy and operation as the order which ought to have been passed by the latter. S. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that the High Court, as a Court of revision, may exercise the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by s. 195. In a case in which both the Original Criminal Court and the Appellate Criminal Court refuse sanction, the High Court, as a Court of revision, may call for the record and, if the refusal proceeds on an error of law, it may accord the sanction, which ought to have been granted by the Appellate Criminal Court and such sanction will be operative for the purposes of cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. (1). A plaintiff in a suit applied for attachment before judgment and filed an affidavit in support of that application, in which he stated that the defendants intended to alienate their properties with mala fide intentions. He did not state in the affidavit that this statement was based on what he had been told. He was, however, orally examined, and then deposed that he had heard that the defendants were intending to alienate property. The petition was dismissed. Thereupon sanction was asked for, the Subordinate Judge according sanction only for an offence under s. 199 of the Indian Penal Code, and refusing sanction for offences under ss. 193, 196 and 200. The sanction accorded was not based on the oral evidence, but on the statement in the affidavit. The defendants appealed (under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure) against the refusal to grant sanction for offences under ss. 193, 196 and 200, to the District Judge who accorded sanction for the prosecution of the petitioner under those sections also. Held, on revision, that the District Judge had not exercised a sound discretion in according the sanction, for although the petitioner had not stated in his affidavit that the statements therein were made on hearsay, he had stated so in his oral evidence and the affidavit was not inconsistent with that evidence. Quœre: Whether a Village Magistrate is a Magistrate within the meaning of s. 197, cl. 3. ——— Power of superior Court to revoke sanction after complaint lodged. P obtained sanction from a Stationary Sub-Magistrate to prosecute S for offences under ss. 211 and 193, Penal Code, alleged to have been committed before that Magistrate. P did not prefer any complaint in pursuance of the sanction, but the police, relying on it, preferred a charge sheet to the Joint Magistrate against the accused in respect of the alleged offence under s. 211. The Joint Magistrate struck the case off his file, giving as his reason for so doing that he suo motu quashed the Sub-Magistrate's sanction under s. 195 (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held, that the Joint Magistrate's action in striking the case off his file was legal and proper, though the reason given by him for so doing was erroneous and his act in quashing the sanction ultra vires. A Joint Magistrate, though authorized under s. 407 (2) to entertain appeals preferred by persons convicted on a trial by the Stationary Magistrate, is not the Court to which appeals from the Court of the Stationary Magistrate ordinarily lie, within the meaning of s. 195 (7). The Court, to which the Court of the Stationary Magistrate is, within the meaning of s. 195 (6) and (7), subordinate is that of the District Magistrate. Eroma Variar v. *Emperor, I. L. The Joint Magistrate could not, therefore, revoke the sanction given by the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, the District Magistrate alone having the power to revoke or grant a sanction given or refused by the Stationary Sub-Magistrate. Nor was it competent to a District Magistrate, under s. 407, to direct that applications for revoking or granting a sanction given or refused by a Sub-Magistrate may be presented to the Joint Magistrate. Whether the Court authorized to exercise such a power under sub-s. Thief was caught. Please come; prosecute him." The head-constable inquired into the matter and reported it to be false. The Inspector of Police, in submitting the case to the District Magistrate, recommended that the station-master should be called upon to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under s. 182 or s. 211 of the Penal Code. A judicial inquiry was held by a Deputy Magistrate, and the District Magistrate sanctioned the prosecution of the accused. The accused was tried and convicted under s. 182 of the Penal Code by an Assistant Magistrate with second class powers: Held, that the sanction given by the District Magistrate was sufficient; that a prosecution for a false charge might be under s. 182 or s. 211 of the Penal Code, but if the false charge was a serious one, the proper course would be to proceed under s. 211. Held, further, that the present case not being a serious one, it was quite legal to prosecute the accused under s. 182 of the Code. Bhokteram v. *Heera Kalita, I. The Public Prosecutor failed to appear in the Court on the day and at the hour fixed for the hearing of the application. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the application as for default. On an application being made to review this order the Subordinate Judge declined to do so. On appeal, however, the District Judge granted the sanction under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898). Held, that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to accord the sanction on appeal, under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) inasmuch as there was no sanction given or refused by the Subordinate Judge. The only jurisdiction, which the District Judge had under the circumstances was to revise the order passed by the Subordinate Judge dismissing the application as for default. Held, further, that there was no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) which warranted the Subordinate Judge in rejecting or dismissing the application of the Public Prosecutor, because of his failure to appear at the time the application was called on for dismissal. The Subordinate Judge was bound to consider the application on its merits, even though the party, who made it, was not there to help the Court. Held, also, that the Subordinate Judge had no power to review his order because the Criminal Procedure Code contained no provision giving jurisdiction to a Court to review orders passed under it. the Deputy Commissioner directed the prosecution of the petitioner under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, but this order having been set aside by the High Court, the Deputy Commissioner returned the record of the case to the Deputy Magistrate who had held the enquiry and the Deputy Magistrate on the examination of two more witnesses tendered by the petitioner ordered his prosecution under ss. 182 and 211, Indian Penal Code: Held, that the order for prosecution was not bad in law under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code. Begu Singh v. The Emperor, 11 C. W. N. 568: s. c. I. L. R. 34 Calc. 551; Rahimdulla v. The Emperor, I. L. R. 31 Mad. 140, explained. It would be a dangerous doctrine to lay down any hard and fast rule to the effect that a criminal trial or enquiry should of necessity be stayed simply because a civil suit has been instituted between the parties in which some or all the matters materially in issue in the criminal case would have to be determined, until the civil litigation was finally decided. Jadu Lal v. Lowis, 11 C. W. N. 712: s. c. I. L. R. 34 Calc. 848, explained. It is very desirable in the ends of justice that when a competent Court has taken upon itself the responsibility of ordering a prosecution under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, that that prosecution should be entertained as speedily as possible while the evidence on both sides is fresh. Hem Chandra v. Atul Behary, I. L. R. 35 Calc. 909, followed. But a Court may well hesitate to give sanction under s. 195, Criminal Procedure Code, to a private individual to prosecute his adversary for an offence alleged to have been committed during the pendency of a civil litigation before it has terminated. Where in his information to the Police, the petitioner did not name any one as the actual offender but what he did was to report that a burglary or theft had taken place in his house and that he suspected that the opposite party had instigated it: Held, that the order for prosecution of the petitioner under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, was justified, as it was found by the Magistrate that as a matter of fact no burglary or theft had at all taken place as alleged by the petitioner. "High Court" in s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) does not mean a Judge sitting on the Original Side of the Court, but it means a Civil Appellate Bench of the Court; a Judge sitting on the Original Side has consequently no jurisdiction to entertain an application for extending the time during which a sanction under s. 195 of the Code is to remain in force. Such time cannot be extended after it has expired. In re Muthukundam Pillai, I. L. R. 26 Mad. 190, and Karuppana Servagaran v. Sinna Gounden, I. L. R. 26 Mad. 480, dissented from. ——— ss. 195, 196, 197, 215, 436—Sanction—Notice to accused—Reference to High Court—Revisional powers. S. 215 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not applicable to a case in which a commitment in question has not been made under any one of the four sections therein specified, but has been made under the directions of the High Court under s. 526 (1) iv. An order of a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate passed under s. 436, directing commitment, may be quashed by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional powers, though not under s. 215. But an order passed by the High Court itself under s. 526 cannot be so revised. Sanction accorded by Government under s. 197 is not null and void for the reason that no notice was given to the accused to show cause why it should not be given. It is a matter left to the discretion of Government whether such opportunity should be given to the person concerned before sanctioning his prosecution. There is a marked distinction between the classes of offences dealt with in s. 195, cls. (b) and (c), and those dealt with in s. 197. A Court granting sanction under s. 195 (b) and (c) does so in connection with offences committed in or in relation to any proceeding in such Court, and the Court therefore acts in its judicial capacity in granting the sanction on legal evidence. But the Government, in according or withholding sanction under s. 197 (for the prosecution of a public servant in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed by him as such public servant), acts purely in its executive capacity and the sanction need not be based on legal evidence. The Criminal Procedure Code does not prescribe any particular form for the sanction required by s. 197 as it does in the case of a sanction accorded under s. 195. In the matter of KALAGAVA BAPIAH (1904) . . . . I. complaint under s. 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to rehear the complaint, when such order of dismissal had not been set aside by a higher Court: Held (SUBRAHMANIA AYYAR and DAVIES, JJ., dissenting), that the dismissal of a complaint under s. 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not operate as a bar to the rehearing of the complaint by the same Magistrate, even when such order of dismissal has not been set aside by a competent authority. Mahomed Abdul Mennan v. Panduranga Row, I. L. R. 28 Mad. 256, dissented from. Dwarka Nath Mondul v. Bani Madhab Banerjee. I. L. R. 28 Calc. 652, and Mir Ahwad Hossein v. Mahomed Askari, I. L. R. 29 Calc. 726, approved and followed. Per SIR ARNOLD WHITE, C. J.—The power to enquire into an offence must be held to exist in a Magistrate until something has occurred to divest the Magistrate of this jurisdiction. An order under s. 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not a judgment to which the provisions of s. 369 will apply. The principle of autrefois acquit will not apply as there is no trial when the complaint is dismissed under s. 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The provisions of ss. 147, 400, 215 and 210 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1872 compared with the corresponding ss. 203, 403, 253 and 242 of the present Code. The alterations in the present Code in regard to the sections under consideration, were merely drafting alterations and were not intended to effect and did not effect any alteration in the law as laid down by the old Code. Per BENSON, J.—The decisions in Queen-Empress v. Adam Khan, I. L. R. 22 All 106, Nilratan Sen v. Jogesh Chundra Bhattacharjee, I. L. R. 23 Calc. 983, and Mahomed Abdul Mennan v. Panduranga Row, I. L. R. 28 Mad. 255, do not apply, as in those cases it was not the same, but different Magistrate, who proceeded to rehear the complaint. There is no bar under the Code to the complaint being reheard, unless the proceedings have reached such a state of finality that an acquittal or an order operating as such under the Code is recorded. Per MOORE, J.—The maxim nemo bis vexari has no application to an order under s. 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, though it may be a good argument, where an accused has been discharged under ss. 253 and 259 of the Code. Per SUBRAHMANIA AYYAR, J.—Although the technical doctrine of autrefois acquit will apply only to acquittals, the principle underlying such doctrine, that a person should not, in respect of an offence, be in jeopardy of prosecution more than once, applies to cases where the prosecution failed to reach the stage of acquittal without any fault on the part of the accused, unless its application is precluded by the provisions of the Code. Acquittal in common law means an acquittal after verdict or sentence. The Legislature having by ss. 333, 494 and 248 of the Code of Criminal Procedure given the term a wider significance, the explanation to s. 403 was intended to guard against the term being applied to cases where the plea of autrefois acquit was not technically applicable and not to bar the application of the aforesaid analogous principle, where justice required it. There being thus no legal provision to the contrary, an order dismissing a complaint or discharging the accused must, on the above principle, operate as a bar to further enquiry into the same matter as long as such order remains in force. Orders under ss. 203, 253 and 259 of the Code of Criminal Procedure stand on the same footing as regards the application of this doctrine. There is no inherent power in a Magistrate to revise his own order of dismissal or discharge. EMPEROR v. CHINNA KALIAPPA GOUNDEN (1905) . . . . I. L. R. 29 Mad. 126

——— Commitment to the Sessions, if may be quashed by High Court—Evidence not sufficient to be left to a jury—Point of law—Records called for by Sessions Judge—Magistrate, if bound to stay proceedings—Abetment. Where the evidence upon which a Magistrate ordered the commitment of the accused to the Sessions for trial upon charges of abetment of offences under ss. 193, 196 and 471, Penal Code, was that (i) a servant in the employ of the accused gave false evidence and produced forged documents at the trial of certain rent suits, in which the accused was the plaintiff, (ii) that the accused was present actively prosecuting those suits, (iii) that the evidence, if believed, would have supported his case, (iv) that the accused sometimes made collections and had sometimes tested collection papers: Held by HARINGTON, J. (agreeing with HENDERSON, J.), that this just stopped short of a case which could properly be left to a jury. Commitment was accordingly quashed. HARINGTON, J.—The test, which should be applied to decide whether a committal ought or ought not to be made on the facts is this—assuming that the whole of the evidence telling against the accused is true, is there a case which a Judge at a trial could leave to a jury? If the evidence is such that a Judge would have been bound to rule that there was no evidence on which a jury could convict, then a committal ought not to be made. If there is any evidence which calls for an answer, however great the preponderance in favour of the prisoner may be, then the committal is proper. SHEOBUX RAM v. EMPEROR (1905)

But the omission to set out the common object does not necessarily make the conviction bad. It is necessary to see whether or not the accused has been misled by the omission, and the omission has caused a failure of justice. ——— ss. 222, 234—Criminal breach of trust—Joinder in one trial of charges for two distinct items with another for a gross sum is not illegal—Construction of statute. Under s. 222 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a charge of criminal breach of trust in respect of a gross sum, without specifying the items, is a charge for one offence within the meaning of s. 234. S. 222 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply only to cases where there is a general deficiency and the prosecution is unable to specify the particular items of the deficiency, but also to cases where the items may be, but are not, specified. The joinder in one trial of charges of criminal breach of trust in respect of two distinct items with a charge in respect of a gross sum (the items constituting which may be, but are not, specified) is a joinder of only three charges, and is not bad as contravening the provisions of s. 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. "The essence of a code is to be exhaustive on the matter in respect of which it declares the law and it is not the province of a Judge to disregard or go outside the enactment according to its true construction." Subramania Aiyar v. *King-Emperor, I. of money from the trust funds to his own use, thus evidently carrying through their object in concert, the fact that they carried out their scheme by successive acts done at intervals, alternately taking the benefits, did not prevent the unity of the project from constituting the series of acts one transaction, i.e., the carrying through of the same object which both had from the first act to the last; and there was no objection to there being tried jointly at one trial. S. 222 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) clearly admits of the trial of any number of acts of breach of trust committed within the year as amounting only to one offence. The section does not require any particular formulation of the accusation, but only enacts that it is sufficient to show the aggregate offence without specifying the details. It dispenses with the necessity of amplification; it does not prohibit enumeration of the particular items in the charge. S. 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) admits of the joint trial when more persons than one are accused of different offences committed in the same transaction. It suffices for the purpose of justifying a joint trial that the accusation alleges the offences committed by each accused to have been committed in the same transaction, within the meaning of s. 239. It is not necessary that the charge should contain the statement as to the transaction being one and the same. It is the tenour of the acquisition and not the wording of the charge that must be considered as the test. In s. 239 of the Code, a series of acts separated by intervals of time are not excluded, provided that those jointly tried have throughout been directed to one and the same objective. If the accused started together for the same goal, this suffices to justify the joint trial, even if incidentally, one of those jointly tried has done an act for which the other may not be responsible. The foundation for the procedure in s. 239 is the association of two persons concurring from start to finish to attend the same end. No doubt, if it were attempted to associate in the trial of a person, who had no connection whatever with the transaction at a time when one or more of the series of the acts alleged had been done, then that would be outside the provisions of the section. "Transaction" means "carrying through" and suggests not necessarily proximity in time, so much as continuity of action and purpose. EMPEROR v. DATTO (1905) . I. L. R. 30 Bom. 49

At the trial there was no other evidence of the publication of the newspaper in Bombay except the declaration made by the accused under the Press Act, and the depositions of witnesses who received the newspaper in Bombay as Government servants in their capacity as such. The accused was convicted on both the charges and sentenced separately on each of them. It was contended in appeal that there was no evidence of the publication of the newspaper in Bombay, and that there was a misjoinder of charges vitiating the trial. Held, that the evidence on record was sufficient to prove the publication of the newspaper in Bombay. Held, further, that the trial was not bad as there had been no misjoinder of charges. Per CHANDAVARKAR, J. :—It is true that the Magistrate framed two charges, one with respect to each of the two articles. But in each charge the offences are mentioned as being those punishable under ss. 124A and 153A of the Indian Penal Code, so that the accused had distinct notice of the charges he had to answer, and he could hardly have been prejudiced by the somewhat informal mode in which the charges were drawn up. The defect, if any, was no more than a mere irregularity, cured by the provisions of s. 225 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code which directs that where an accused person is alleged to have done two or more acts, each of which may fall within the definition of an offence under one or another section of the Indian Penal Code, the section or sections in either case being the same, the joinder of the charges under those sections is illegal. Substantially the acts amount in such a case to offences punishable under the same sections of the Indian Penal Code and therefore they are offences of the same kind. Per HEATON, J. :—S. 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not say that at most a trial must be limited to three charges : it says it must be limited to three offences and that the offences must be of the same kind. The "offence" as defined by the Code itself, is the act or omission made punishable. The offences in this case were two in number, namely, the publication of two articles on two different dates. These two offences were, as charged, punishable under the same section of the Indian Penal Code, and were, therefore, offences of the same kind. The word "section" in s. 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not invariably to be read as singular. It is not the intention of the Code of Criminal Procedure, either express or implied, to exclude from the operation of s. 234 of the Code an offence because it is made the subject of more than one charge. Charging one act or series of acts under more than one section of the Indian Penal Code, is a proceeding provided for in s. 235 (cl. 2) and in s. 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code and is also provided for in section 71 of the Indian Penal Code. The Court may charge an offence twice over under two different sections but by so doing it cannot increase the sentence which may be imposed. That principle is not offended by trying together separate offences for each of which there is more than one charge. EMPEROR v. TRIBHOVANDAS (1908)

The accused was put upon his trial before the Sessions Court on charges under ss. 471 and $\frac{471}{511}$ of the Penal Code. Upon motion to the High Court it was held that a previous acquittal covered the charge under s. 471, and that the accused could be tried only under s. $\frac{471}{511}$. When the case came to trial, the Sessions Judge amended the charge to one under s. $\frac{420}{511}$:—Held, that the Judge had full power under the law to amend the charge, and that the High Court did not intend to fetter his discretion. At the conclusion of the evidence to establish those charges and after the evidence for the defence had been recorded, the Court added a charge under s. 498 (enticing a married woman) of the Code, notwithstanding the objection by the accused's counsel. The trial ended in conviction of the accused on all the three charges. The accused appealed contending that the procedure adopted was contrary to the provisions of s. 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to the spirit of s. 238 of the Code:—Held, (i) that the procedure adopted in the case was not regular. The additional charge framed at the stage it was framed, notwithstanding the objection by the accused's counsel, was prejudicial to the accused; (ii) that the conviction under s. 498 of the Indian Penal Code should be set aside; and further investigation be made into the remaining charges. It is not necessary to constitute an offence under s. 473 that trademark in the sense in which the word is used in the English Patents, Designs and Trademarks Acts should have been acquired; and the mark is none the less a false mark because it appeared on the box and not on the goods. Under ss. 233 and 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a person cannot be charged with more than three offences at one trial; and the defect cannot be cured, after the accused had pleaded and the case had closed, by amending the charges so as to reduce it to three offences. Although the words in s. 227 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are wide enough to warrant a Court in altering a charge by striking out one of the charges at any time before judgment, the section does not warrant the striking out of a charge for the purpose of curing an illegality already committed and after the mischief which the Legislature intended to guard against had been done. Subrahmania Aiyar v. *King-Emperor, I. He was charged with the offences of criminal misappropriation and cheating under ss. 408 and 420, Indian Penal Code, and was tried for the offences in one trial: Held, that the offence under s. 408, Indian Penal Code, was committed against the firm and was complete before the petitioner cheated the Railway Company, and therefore the two offences could not be tried together as they were not committed in one transaction. J in satisfaction of his debt. K was found to have in his possession a portion of the property identified as stolen in the same theft, but there was nothing to show when he received it and from whom. Under these circumstances the three persons S, J and K were tried together at one trial on charges of receiving stolen property knowing it to be stolen: Held by RUSSELL and BATTY, JJ., that the three offences against the three accused S, J and K were distinct offences, which could not be regarded as offences committed in the same transaction within the meaning of s. 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code and that the trial of the three accused together was in contravention of the provisions of s. 233 of the Code, and was therefore illegal. Per BATTY, J.—"The offence punishable under s. 414 of the Penal Code is that of voluntarily assisting in disposing of stolen property and therefore must necessarily form part of the same transaction as the receipt by the person to whom it is so disposed of. It necessarily involves manifest criminality in both persons at one and the same time, when both offences are committed. The words of s. 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1898, are, to say the least of it, ambiguous, if intended to include in the same transaction a series of acts one or more of which had been done at a time before the parties to the subsequent acts had anything to do with that transaction. The illustrations to the section seem to suggest that the persons to be jointly tried must have been associated from the first in the series of acts, which form the same transaction. The inevitable result appears to be that the proceedings of the Magistrate were illegal and a nullity . . . . There has been no legal trial. There has therefore been no legal acquittal and there is therefore neither an appeal against acquittal nor an acquittal to reverse and the question whether the accused should now be legally tried is a question not for judicial decision, but for the consideration of the authorities, with whom it rests to proceed with a prosecution." Subrahmania Ayyar v. *King-Emperor, I. 2. ——— Charges—Misjoinder—Same transaction, what is—Circumstances showing occurrence did not form the same transaction. Where the accused, more than five in number, after having obstructed certain Civil Court peons in the execution of a decree, held a consultation, and then at the instance of two of them, all of them, with the exception of one or two, proceeded to the kutchery of the decree-holder in order to beat his son and his tehsildar, and brought out the tehsildar whom they took to the house of the judgment-debtor where they had obstructed the Civil Court peon, and violently assaulted him there: Held, that the two occurrences, the one of obstructing the execution of the decree and the other of assaulting the tehsildar, did not form one transaction and the accused could not be tried on charges arising out of both the occurrences at one trial. The second occurrence was clearly the result of an after-thought and there was then no further intention to obstruct the execution of the decree in the course of which the incidents of the first occurrence took place and it cannot be said that there was any continuity in the ideas or methods of the rioters. The fact that all the accused did not take part in the second occurrence and that the common object in respect of it was different from that in respect of the first occurrence shows that the two occurrences did not form parts of the same transaction. Umed Dholchand v. *Pir Saheb, I. 3. ——— ss. 233 to 237 and 239—Charges, joinder of charges—Privy Council, leave to appeal to, in criminal case—Practice and procedure. The accused was charged with an offence punishable under s.124A of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 186) in respect of an article which he published in his newspaper and also with offences punishable under ss. 124A and 153A of the Code with regard to another article which he published in the same newspaper. For all these offences he was tried at one trial, and was convicted and sentenced for each of them. Held, that there was no irregularity in the trial on the ground of misjoinder of charges. Ss. 234, 235, 236 and 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, mentioned as exceptions in s. 233 of the Code, are not mutually exclusive. If it had been intended that s. 235 (2) or s. 236 could not be made use of in co-operation with s. 234, this intention could have been easily expressed. If the exceptions are mutually exclusive, the provisions of ss. 236 or 237 could never be invoked to prevent a miscarriage of justice arising from a failure to make good all the details of a charge joined with two other charges under s. 234. The Legislature could hardly have intended that a joint trial of three offences under s. 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, should prevent the prosecution from establishing at the same trial the minor or alternative degrees of criminality involved in the acts complained of. Ss. 235 (2) and 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, may be resorted to in framing additional charges where the trial is of three offences of the same kind committed within the year. Before granting a certificate for leave to appeal to the Privy Council the Court must be satisfied that there is reasonable ground for thinking that grave and substantial injustice may have been done by reason of some departure from the principles of natural justice. Ex parte Carew, [1897] A.C. 719, and Dinizulu v. *Attorney-General of Zululand, 61 L. Subsequently C and P were tried together, C under s. 240, Penal Code, for making over the coins to P and P under s. 243, Penal Code: Held, that the delivery of the counterfeit coins by C to P was a distinct offence from that for which C was previously convicted, and C could be subsequently tried for this offence. That the joint trial of C and P was, having regard to the provisions of s. 239, read with the first clause of s. 235 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, permissible in law. That P might have been tried with C for abetting an offence under s. 240, Penal Code, inasmuch as he received the counterfeit coin with the deliberate intention of committing a fraud by passing it off as genuine Queen's coin, and his conviction could be legitimately altered to one under s. 240 read with s. 109, Penal Code. 2. ——— Illegal gratification—Taking bribe of R2 for the registration of each of seven documents presented together, whether one offence—One transaction. Where the accused, a Sub-Registrar, was charged in one count with having received a bribe of R2 for each of seven kobalas presented together for registration, which were executed by one person in favour of seven different persons: Held, that the count did not amount to a charge of seven separate offences and there was no misjoinder of charges, having regard to the provisions of s. 235, Criminal Procedure Code. The question whether what was alleged in the count amounted to seven separate offences and seven different charges is one of fact. If the accused attempted to obtain R2 separately for each of the kobalas and was willing to register any of them on the receipt of the sum, then there would be seven separate offences. But if he was not willing to register any one of the kobalas unless R2 for each of the kobalas were paid then there would be one offence in one transaction. Johan Subarna v. *King-Emperor, 10 C. The Deputy Magistrate convicted the accused of an offence under s. 498 of the Penal Code, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The intention of the law is to prevent Magistrates inquiring of their own motion into cases connected with marriage unless the husband or other person authorized moves them to do so. But when the husband is complainant and brings his complaint under s. 366, a convicion under s. 498 may properly be had if the evidence be such as to justify a conviction for the minor offence, and yet insufficient for a conviction for the graver one. 1. ——— Order for compensation. The question whether the discretion given by s. 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has been rightly exercised, must always depend upon the facts of the particular case. If the false charge is of such a nature that a prosecution is necessary on grounds of public policy, it may well be that a Magistrate would exercise his discretion wrongly if, instead of sanctioning a prosecution, he awarded compensation. If the false charge is one, which does not render it necessary on grounds of public policy that a prosecution should be sanctioned, a Magistrate, who makes an order for compensation, cannot be said to exercise his discretion wrongly. In the matter of TAMMI REDDI (1904)

——— Trial by Jury—Trial with the aid of assessors—Difference in the modes of trial—Accused if prejudiced can complain—Practice—Procedure. The accused were tried with a jury on charges of murder (ss. 302, 109, Indian Penal Code), and with the aid of jurors as assessors on charges of rioting, grievous hurt and hurt (ss. 147, 148, 326 and 323 of the Code) respectively. The Judge charged the jury and asked for their verdict on both the charges in the manner prescribed for jury trials. He agreed with the verdict and sentenced the accused to various terms of imprisonment. The accused appealed on the grounds that the learned Judge erred in omitting to take the opinion of the jurors as assessors on the second charge and to write a judgment. Held, that the law makes no distinction as to the procedure at the trial between a trial by a jury and one with the aid of assessors except as to the summing up in the case of the former and the manner in which the verdict in the former and the opinions of the assessors in the latter are respectively taken. It is at this latter point that there is a departure of ways, and if the accused who is tried does not intervene at that crucial point, and get the procedure applicable to trial with the aid of assessors enforced, he cannot be heard to complain. The certificate of the Magistrate appended to such confession in order to afford primâ facie evidence, under s. 80 of the Evidence Act, of the circumstances mentioned in it relative to the taking of the statement ought to give the facts necessary to render the deposition admissible under s. 249. the evidence given by them before the committing Magistrate; and the Sessions Judge, purporting to act under s. 249, Act X of 1872, discarded the evidence taken before himself, and grounded his judgment on the evidence given before the Magistrate, and on this evidence convicted the prisoner and sentenced him to death. On appeal by the prisoner: Held, that s. 249 did not warrant such a course of proceeding. That section merely authorizes the Court to take a particular statement, made by a witness before the Magistrate as the true statement, notwithstanding that it is denied, or a statement inconsistent with it was made by the witness before the Judge, only if the Judge should see that the original statement was worthy of belief, and does not mean that the Court should discard wholly the testimony of witnesses before it and have recourse to the testimony of the same persons given before another officer. 6. ——— Duty of Sessions Judge as to evidence taken before the Magistrate. Sessions Judges should act with great caution in exercising the discretion given to them by s. 288, Code of Criminal Procedure, in admitting evidence given by a witness before the committing Magistrate. Where at a Sessions trial the Sessions Judge admitted, under s. 288, Code of Criminal Procedure, such evidence, without any inquiry as to the allegation made by the witness that her statement before the Magistrate was made under pressure and threat by the police:—Held, that the District Judge should not have placed reliance on the evidence as given before the Magistrate, and that he would have shown a better discretion if he had first made some inquiry by examining the police officer as to the restraint and pressure under which the statement was alleged to have been made. A witness was not examined in the Sessions Court with regard to the particular statements made by him before the committing Magistrate, and he did not repeat those statements before the Sessions Court. Held, that the Sessions Judge could not properly admit such statements in evidence under s. 288, Criminal Procedure Code. Where a witness was examined in the Sessions Court and had shown no disposition in any way to resile from any statement he had made before the committing Magistrate, the admission of that deposition by a Sessions Judge under s. 288, Code of Criminal Procedure, was improper. Queen v. Amanulla, 12 B. L. R. Ap. 15 : 21 W. R. Cr. 49, and Queen-Empress v. Dan Sahai, I. L. R. 7 All. 862, followed. Where a medical officer gave evidence before the committing Magistrate and it was not certified that the evidence was given in presence of the accused:—Held, that the admission of such evidence by the Sessions Judge under s. 288, Code of Criminal Procedure, was also improper. Where the police had kept a witness under surveillance for four days and the Sessions Judge considered that they were justified under the circumstances of the case:—Held, that there is no warrant in law for the police to keep the witness under such restraint, and that statements so obtained can hardly be regarded as voluntary. 7. ——— Previous statement to committing Magistrate retracted in Sessions Court—Use of such statement by Sessions Court as substantive evidence. Where a witness who has made a statement before the committing Magistrate subsequently resiles from that statement in the Court of Session, the statement made before the committing Magistrate can be used under s. 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to contradict the witness; but the use of such statement as substantial evidence of the facts alleged by the witness on the prior occasion is fraught with the gravest peril, and could never have been the intention of the Legislative. The pardon was accepted, and the person to whom it was tendered made a statement as a witness before the Magistrate. The case having been committed to the Court of Session, the approver in that Court totally repudiated his statement made before the Magistrate. Held, that this repudiation did not prevent the Sessions Court from considering the evidence of the approver under the provisions of s. 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. sented their vakalutnamahs, and applied to be allowed to conduct the defence of the accused. The Magistrate refused permission, and, after recording the depositions of the witnesses, committed the accused to take their trial before the Sessions Court. In the Court of the Magistrate the only material evidence for the prosecution was that of three witnesses, who, on being examined in the Sessions Court, denied all knowledge of the facts to which they had deposed before the Magistrate. Two of them denied having made the statements recorded, while the third admitted the statements attributed to him, but asserted they were false and made under pressure. The Sessions Judge, disbelieving the statements made in his Court, thereupon, under s. 249 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872 (as amended by s. 20 of the Amending Act), used the previous depositions as evidence in the case, and mainly upon these convicted the accused of murder and sentenced them to transportation for life. Against this conviction and sentence the prisoners appealed to the High Court on the ground that the previous depositions ought not to have been used as evidence in the case, as the Magistrate had refused to allow their pleaders to appear and cross-examine the witnesses who made the depositions. The High Court affirmed the convictions and sentence. In the matter of DHAM MUNDUL . . . . 6 C. L. R. 53

——— Meaning of words "no evidence" in section. The words "no evidence" in the second and third clauses of s. 289 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) must not be read as meaning "no satisfactory, trustworthy, or conclusive evidence." If there is evidence, the trial must go on to its close; when in trials by jury, the jury, and in other trials the Judge, after considering the opinions of the assessors, have to find on the facts. It is only in the absence of any evidence as to the commission of the offence by the accused that the Court can record an acquittal without allowing the trial to go on, or obtaining the opinion of the assessors, or that the Court can direct the jury, without going into the defence to return a verdict of not guilty. Queen-Empress v. *Munna Lal, I. Code. He was examined as a witness for the Crown before the committing Magistrate, and he made a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relating to such offence. He repeated them in his examination-in-chief before the Sessions Judge, but resiled from his statements in cross-examination. At the conclusion of the trial, in which the accomplices were convicted of murder, the Sessions Judge sent the pardoned accomplice in custody to the committing Magistrate with an order directing that he should be committed for trial for the same murder. The Magistrate accordingly withdrew the pardon and committed the accused to the Sessions Court to take his trial for the murder aforesaid. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused of murder on what was described as his plea of guilty and he was sentenced to transportation for life. On appeal: Held, by ASTON, J., that the Sessions Judge had no authority under the Code of Criminal Procedure to order the accused to be committed for trial for the murder in respect of which a pardon had been tendered; and further, that the accused's trial was conducted with material irregularity, which seriously prejudiced the accused and occasioned a failure of justice. Held, by BEAMAN, J., that the Sessions Judge, who presided at the first trial, had no power to make the order purporting to have been under s. 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directing the commitment of the accused on the ground that he had forfeited his pardon; and that the procedure adopted was both wrong and illegal. Per ASTON, J.—It is open to a pardoned accomplice, if placed on trial as an accomplice, who has forfeited the pardon already accepted by him, to plead in bar of trial that he did comply with the condition on which the tender of pardon was made, and such plea in bar of trial would have to be gone into and decided before the accused is called on to enter his plea in defence to the charge of having committed the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered. S. 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not enact that a person who had accepted a tender of pardon, renders himself liable to be tried for the offence in respect of which pardon was tendered, if he gives false evidence; what the section says is that he renders himself so liable (or forfeits the pardon) if by giving false evidence he has not complied with the condition on which the tender was made. Per BEAMAN, J.—At the termination of the trial in which the pardon was given, the accomplice must be discharged by the Court. Then if so advised, the Crown may re-arrest and proceed against him for the offence in respect of which he was given a conditional pardon. When put upon his trial for that offence, he may plead to a competent Court his pardon, in bar. And that is a plea that the Court would be bound to hear and decide upon before going further and putting him on his defence. In deciding it the Court would have

The accused was deaf and dumb, and could not be made to understand the proceedings which had been taken. On the proceedings being forwarded to the High Court under s. 341 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it was held that the law does not contemplate that the Sessions trial should necessarily take place. proved that the accused made and published the matter, which was alleged to be defamatory. The Magistrate, however, asked the accused, if they had signed the petition, and accepted their answers as proving that they had, and as relieving the prosecution from proving the making and publication of the alleged defamatory matter by the accused. He convicted the accused. Held, that the convictions must be set aside. A gap in the evidence for the prosecution cannot be filled up by any statement made by the accused in his examination under s. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The other accused, who were natives of India, then claimed to be tried separately under s. 452. The trial of D then proceeded, and at the close of the case for the prosecution he proposed to call as his witnesses the persons who had been charged with him and who were awaiting their trial. They objected to be called. Held, that he was entitled to call them as witnesses and to examine them on oath. The words "the accused" in cl. 4 of s. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) means the accused then under trial and under examination by the Court. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DURANT . . . I. L. A subordinate Magistrate, having taken all the evidence for the prosecution and for the defence, sent the case to the Magistrate of the District, not on the grounds mentioned in s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the District Magistrate, observing that none of the accused asked to have the witnesses re-heard, gave judgment upon the evidence taken by the subordinate Magistrate. The Sessions Judge refused to interfere in revision with the District Magistrate's proceedings on the ground that they were covered by s. 350 of the Code. Held, that this view was erroneous, that neither under s. 192 nor under s. 349 was there any transfer to the District Magistrate by his subordinate, that s. 350 was inapplicable, and that the order passed by the District Magistrate must be quashed. ——— ss. 394, 395—Magistrate cannot award imprisonment in lieu of whipping when on a certificate of the medical officer before infliction of whipping the sentence of whipping is reduced. The power of a Magistrate under s. 395 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to award imprisonment in lieu of whipping is confined to cases in which under s. 394 a sentence of whipping is wholly or partially prevented from being executed. Such power only exists when, under s. 394 (1) a medical officer present certifies that the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo such punishment or when under s. 394 (2) during the execution of the sentence a medical officer certifies that the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo the remainder of the sentence. There is no provision of law, which authorises a medical officer to certify, before the infliction of whipping, that the prisoner is fit to undergo only a smaller number of stripes than that actually ordered. Where in consequence of such a certificate a smaller number of stripes is inflicted, the Magistrate has no power to award imprisonment in lieu of the whipping not inflicted. It is, therefore, not necessary for the High Court to upset the acquittal before the re-trial can be had. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. HUSEIN GAIBU

2. ——— Previous acquittal. Upon a charge of dacoity, the Magistrate, having split up the charge, convicted the accused of rioting, using criminal force, and misappropriating the property of a deceased person. On appeal the Sessions Court reversed the conviction, holding that the offence, if any, was dacoity, but that the facts alleged being incredible, there was no need to order a committal. The complainant thereupon lodged a fresh complaint of dacoity based on the same facts

On the application of the complainant, the District Magistrate directed further enquiry into the case under s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and on a reference to the Court of Session the Sessions Judge held that, as no inquiry into the charge of theft had been held, the order was legal. Held, that the District Magistrate has no power to pass such an order under s. 437, and that a trial on the charge of theft was barred by virtue of s. 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On an application to quash the proceedings on the ground that the accused had been at the first trial put in peril of a conviction for the latter offences, and therefore the first trial operated as a bar to the institution of the present proceedings:—Held the provisions of s. 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code did not operate as a bar to the institution of the present proceedings. Under the second part of that section, the fact of the accused having been charged at the first trial with one offence only, did not prevent the institution of a separate proceeding in respect of some other offence which was disclosed during the course of the first trial. When the case came on for hearing, it appeared that the brother had no such authority and the Magistrate acquitted the accused. The abettor was acquitted. He was, however, subsequently charged before the Sessions Judge, sitting with a jury, with receiving stolen property knowing that it had been obtained by dacoity under s. 412 of the Indian Penal Code. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the accused was convicted and sentenced. The facts on which the accused was convicted of receiving stolen property were the same as those upon which he had been acquitted of abetment of dacoity with murder, the dacoity by which the stolen property was alleged to have been received being the same as that which had formed the subject of the previous charge. On its being contended that the Court had power to try the accused a second time under sub-s. (ii) That the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate cannot, in the exercise of the power to order further inquiry, under s. 437, himself frame the charge or order the Subordinate Magistrate to frame the charge and try the accused. The District Magistrate may, under the other part of the section, make the further inquiry himself and frame a charge in the course of such inquiry. (iii) The Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is not bound to refer the case to the High Court in a case of difference of opinion, owing to mere misappreciation of evidence but would be justified in ordering a reconsideration of the same evidence. (iv) Where the Subordinate Magistrate had dealt with the case in an unsatisfactory way, further inquiry by another Magistrate may be ordered; and such Magistrate may, if necessary, retake the evidence taken before the first Magistrate. Hari Dass Sanyall v. *Saritulla, I. 7. ——— Discharge of accused persons under s. 215—Revival of proceedings at the instance of the Court of Session—Commitment of accused persons. Certain persons were charged under s. 417 of the Penal Code, and were discharged by the Magistrate inquiring into the offence, under s. 215 of Act X of 1872. The Court of Session, considering that the accused persons had been improperly discharged, forwarded the record to the Magistrate of the district, suggesting to him to make the case over to a Subordinate Magistrate, with directions to enquire into any offence, other than the offence in respect of which the accused persons had been discharged, which the evidence on the record showed to have been committed. The Subordinate Magistrate to whom the case was made over made an inquiry, and committed the accused persons for trial before the Court of Session on charges under ss. 363 and 420 of the Penal Code. It was contended that the Court of Session was not competent to "direct the accused persons to be committed" under s. 296 of Act X of 1872, the case not being a "Sessions case" within the meaning of that section, and that the commitment was consequently illegal, Held, that there was no "direction to commit" within the meaning of that section, that is to say, to send the accused persons at once to the Sessions Court, without further inquiry, and whether or not the inquiry was made in consequence of the suggestions of the Court of Session was immaterial, and that the inquiry upon the charges under ss. 363 and 420 of the Penal Code was rightly held by the Subordinate Magistrate, and the commitment could not be impeached. 8. ——— Discharge by Magistrate—Order of commitment by Sessions Judge—Omission to call on accused to show cause against such commitment—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 296, 283. A Sessions Court has no power, under s. 296 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to direct the commitment of a person discharged by a Deputy Magistrate, without first giving such person an opportunity of showing cause against such commitment. But under s. 296, as amended by Act XI of 1874, the Court has power to direct the subordinate Court to enquire into any offences for which it considers a commitment should be ordered. When, however, a trial under such a commitment made by order of a Sessions Judge has been duly held, and no actual failure of justice has been caused by the error of the Sessions Judge, s. 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code would be a bar to the reversal of his judgment. A trial for the offence of cheating is not a Sessions case within the meaning of s. 296, having regard to the first portion of the definition of Sessions case in s. 4 of the Code, which must be read as if the word "only" followed the words "triable by a Court of Session." The Court accordingly was of opinion that, if the accused had no opportunity given them of meeting the charge, the commitment was not a good commitment. In the matter of the petition of BUNDHOO 22 W. 1. ——— "Inferior"—"Subordinate"—First class Magistrate—Magistrate of District. A Magistrate of the first class is, within the meaning of s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, "subordinate" to the Magistrate of the District, who is, therefore, competent to call for the record of the former, and to deal with it under s. 437. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. LASKARI
I. L. R. 7 All. 853

2. ——— "Inferior"—Subordinate Magistrate of first class—Magistrate of District. The Court of a Magistrate of the first class is inferior and subordinate to that of the District Magistrate,—s. 17 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) expressly providing that all Magistrates of whatever class shall be subordinate to the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate is superior, in respect of executive as well as judicial functions, to all other Magistrates. The term "inferior" as used in the Code means statutably incompetent to hold or exercise equal powers, and carries with it the idea of subordination, which latter means "inferior in rank." Nobin Kristo Mookerjee v. *Russick Lal Laha, I. 3. ——— Further inquiry—Different charges arising out of same transaction—Acquittal—Further inquiry—Re-trial. E, being charged with theft and mischief in respect of certain branches cut from a tree claimed by the complainant, was tried by a subordinate Magistrate on the charge of mischief, and acquitted on the ground that, as against the complainant, E had title to the tree. On the application of the complainant, the District Magistrate directed further inquiry into the case under s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and on a reference to the Court of Session the Sessions Judge held that, as no inquiry into the charge of theft had been held, the order was legal. Held, that the District Magistrate had no power to pass such an order under s. 437. 4. ——— Penal Code, ss. 497, 498—Marriage insufficiently proved—Discharge of accused—Re-trial ordered—Wife ordered to be examined on re-trial. In an inquiry into a case of alleged adultery and enticing away a married woman for illicit purposes, the complainant refused to examine his wife as to the marriage; the Deputy Magistrate declined to frame a charge, and discharged the accused. The Sessions Judge directed a re-trial to be held by another Deputy Magistrate, and ordered that the evidence of the wife should be taken as to the marriage. Held, that the Sessions Judge in ordering a re-trial had not exercised a proper discretion, he having admitted, that the prosecution had failed to prove the marriage, and it not being alleged that any evidence was tendered by the prosecution and not taken by the Deputy Magistrate. 5. ——— Further inquiry—Proceedings against accused—Notice. No order affecting an accused in a criminal matter should be made without giving him notice, so as to enable him to appear and show cause against it. A Sessions Judge has no power under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code to direct a particular Magistrate by name to make the further inquiry contemplated by that section. The further inquiry contemplated

6. ——— Further inquiry—Power of District Magistrate to direct—"Inferior Criminal Court"—Notice to accused. The words "Inferior Criminal Court" in s. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code mean inferior so far as regards the particular matter in respect to which the superior Court is asked to exercise its revisional jurisdiction. A criminal charge instituted before a Magistrate of the first class was finally disposed of by him by an order discharging the accused. Subsequently the Magistrate of the district, proceeding under s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, directed a further inquiry to be made by a subordinate Magistrate. This order was made without notice to the accused. Held, that the Magistrate of the district had no jurisdiction to direct a further inquiry. Semble: That, as a matter of strict law, the accused was not entitled to be heard by the District Magistrate before granting the order directing the inquiry. In the matter of the petition of NOBIN KRISTO MOOKERJEE. 7. ——— Further inquiry. A Deputy Magistrate having discharged a person accused of an offence, on the ground that the evidence was insufficient for conviction, the Magistrate of the district recorded an order stating that, in his opinion, the accused had been improperly discharged, and directing under s. 437, Criminal Procedure Code, that further inquiry should be made, and the accused called on to enter upon his defence. The accused was not called upon to show cause why a further inquiry should not be made, but a summons in the terms of s. 68 of the Criminal Procedure Code was issued to him. On his appearance he was tried by the Magistrate of the district, convicted and sentenced. The witnesses for the prosecution were not recalled, but the Magistrate relied upon their evidence as recorded in the first trial, and also upon the statement of a witness for the defence which was not receivable in evidence. Held, that the proceedings of the Magistrate of the district were irregular, first, because notice to show cause why action should not be taken against him in the terms of s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was not served upon the accused person before proceedings, ostensibly under that section, were commenced; and, secondly, because the subsequent proceedings of the Magistrate were not such as are contemplated by the provisions of s. 437, inasmuch as the conviction was practically based upon evidence which was not recorded in the course of a "further inquiry" before the Magistrate of the district, but upon evidence which was recorded by the Deputy Magistrate, and had been adjudicated upon by that officer ; and such irregularities were fatal to the conviction. 8. ——— Discharge—Order for further inquiry—Trial for minor offence—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 253. A Magistrate having, under s. 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, discharged a person accused of rioting, an order for further inquiry was made by the Court of Session under s. 437. Held, that, the offence of rioting not being proved, the Magistrate was competent to try the accused for the offence of assault. 9. ——— Further inquiry—Power of District Magistrate to direct—"Subordinate Magistrate"—Compoundable offence. A criminal charge under s. 448 of the Penal Code having been instituted, the accused was sent up by the police before a Deputy Magistrate of the first class. Previous to any evidence being taken, the complainant intimated to the Magistrate that the case had been amicably settled, and that he did not wish to proceed further in the matter, upon which the Magistrate recorded an order, "Compromised ; defendant acquitted." Subsequently the Magistrate of the district, relying upon ss. 248 and 259 and professing to act under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directed the Deputy Magistrate to send up the parties and proceed regularly with the case. Held, further, that, in addition to the Magistrate's order not being warranted by the fact, it was ultra vires, inasmuch as the Deputy Magistrate was a Magistrate of the first class and not "inferior" to the District Magistrate, and to give the District Magistrate jurisdiction to call for a record under s. 435 from another Magistrate and to act under s. 437, the latter must be inferior. Nobin Kristo Mookerjee v. *Russick Lall Laha, I. Consequently, an order made by a District Judge directing a further inquiry to be held under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code in a case where a Magistrate had discharged the accused under s. 253 was not warranted by law, when there had been a full inquiry by a competent Court and when no further evidence was disclosed, such order being based merely upon the ground that, in the opinion of the District Judge, the evidence recorded was suffi-

12. Further inquiry—Re-trial—District Magistrate, powers of. Where an accused person has been discharged by a Magistrate, further inquiry cannot be directed, under s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, on the ground that the Magistrate has not rightly appreciated the credit due to the witnesses. Further inquiry should only be directed when other witnesses might have been examined, or when the witnesses have not been properly examined ; and inasmuch as s. 437 does not direct that the evidence already taken should be taken again, the further inquiry should ordinarily be made by the Magistrate who made the original inquiry. Where a District Magistrate, being of opinion that a subordinate Magistrate had, without just cause, refused credit to the witnesses in a certain case and had improperly discharged an accused person, directed a further inquiry by another Magistrate, and the accused was on the same evidence re-tried and convicted :—Held, that the conviction must be quashed. The complainant then moved the District Magistrate for further inquiry against the other persons, and the District Magistrate, a different officer, without giving them notice, ordered a further inquiry to be made. Held, that the District Magistrate was not competent, on the face of his predecessor's order, to direct a further inquiry, which had already been practically refused. The term "further inquiry" in s. 437 is not restricted to "inquiry upon further materials or further or additional evidence." Before directing further inquiry under s. 437, it is not obligatory on the District Magistrate to give notice to the person discharged, or against whom the complaint was dismissed. When an order directing such inquiry is made, the Subordinate Magistrate to whom it is directed has jurisdiction, and is bound to c[illegible] t out. The Magistrate recorded a brief statement by the complainant, but did not ask him if he had any witnesses to call. An order was passed directing that "a copy of the petition of complaint should be sent to the police station, calling for a report on the matter," and on receipt of the report the Magistrate dismissed the complaint under s. 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code. There was nothing in the Magistrate's original order to show that he saw reason to distrust the truth of the complaint, nor did he direct any local investigation to be made by a police officer for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint. Subsequently to the dismissal of the complaint, the same complainant brought a fresh charge upon the same facts against the same persons in the same Court, and upon this charge the accused were tried, convicted, and sentenced. Held, that the Magistrate in ordering a further inquiry, on receiving the complainant's second petition, did not act contrary to any provision of the law, and that, considering the circumstances under which the first complaint had been dismissed, a further inquiry was necessary. TOTTENHAM, NORRIS, PIGOT, and O'KINEALY, JJ.), that after an inquiry by a subordinate Magistrate and the discharge of an accused person, a Sessions Judge or Magistrate has jurisdiction, under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to order a "further inquiry" or a re-hearing upon the same materials which were before the subordinate Magistrate, i.e., when no further evidence is forthcoming. But (PRINSEP, J., dissenting) the words "further inquiry" in that section mean the inquiry preliminary to trial which regularly results in a charge or discharge and do not include the trial. And if on the evidence taken the accused ought to be committed, then, in a case triable only at the Sessions, the proper course is to commit under s. 436; in other cases to refer to the High Court. Per PRINSEP, J.—The word "inquiry" includes a trial, and the "further inquiry" would, therefore, allow of the framing of a charge and the cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution. Per PETHERAM, C.J., and GHOSE, J.—The power given by s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code to order a further inquiry is confined to cases in which the revising officer is satisfied, for one of the reasons mentioned in s. 435, that the subordinate officer has proceeded on insufficient materials, and that with a more exhaustive inquiry further material would be forthcoming. complainant and one D were employed as agents for the sale of toddy. Having reason to suspect that an offence under the Abkari Act (Bombay Act V of 1878) had been committed, the accused made an inquiry, in the course of which the complainant made certain statements implicating his fellow-servant. The accused thereupon resolved to prosecute D and make the complainant a witness in the case. In order to prevent him being tutored, the accused ordered his sepoy to bring the complainant to his camp, and there detained him during the night, and on the following morning sent him in charge of a sepoy to a Magistrate's Court, where the complainant repeated the statements made by him before the accused. He was then allowed to go away. The accused prosecuted D, and in the course of his trial admitted in his deposition that he had ordered his sepoy to bring the complainant to his camp, and had detained him there during the night. After the termination of D's trial, the complainant charged the accused with wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Penal Code. The accused pleaded that the complainant had voluntarily come to his tent to have his statements reduced to writing, and that he had of his own accord stopped in his camp during the night. The trying Magistrate held this plea proved, and discharged the accused under s. 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). The Sessions Judge held that, though the accused had detained the complainant in his camp during the night, still he was not guilty of any offence under the Penal Code, as he had acted without malice and to the best of his judgment. He, therefore, declined to interfere or order any further inquiry. Held, by the High Court on revision, that the trying Magistrate had wrongly omitted to take into consideration the admissions made by the accused in his deposition in D's case. Those admissions had an important bearing on the present case. They were admissible in evidence against the accused, and as they were left out of consideration, the inquiry was necessarily incomplete and imperfect. Further inquiry was, therefore, ordered. If it be considered by the Magistrate that it is necessary to institute further proceedings, he is competent to do so under the law, on fresh information received. The further inquiry which can be ordered under s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is into a complaint which has been dismissed or into the case of any accused person who has been discharged. Proceedings under s. 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be regarded as on a complaint, nor can they be regarded as a case in which any accused person has been discharged, for the terms "accused person" and "discharge" in s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure clearly refer to a person accused of an offence who has been discharged from a charge of that offence within the terms of Ch. XIX of the Code. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. IMAN MONDAL I. L. R. 27 Calc. 662

The further inquiry which can be ordered under s. 437, Criminal Procedure Code, is into a complaint which has been dismissed, or into the case of any accused person who has been discharged. Proceedings under s. 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be regarded as on a complaint, nor can they be regarded as a case in which any accused person has been discharged. 38. ——— Jurisdiction—Accused—Discharge—Omission to state reasons in the order for further inquiry. It is not, as a matter of law, obligatory on a District Magistrate to issue a notice upon the accused before directing a further inquiry under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but according to the general principle of criminal jurisdiction, no order prejudicially affecting an accused should be passed without giving him an opportunity of being heard. It is not ordinarily desirable that a District Magistrate should make a detailed examination of the evidence and give elaborate reasons for ordering a further inquiry, but it is desirable that he should give enough reasons to show that his order is a proper one. ——— Privilege of European British subject—Waiver of privilege. The provisions of s. 72 of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to the kind of Court which shall have jurisdiction and shall not have jurisdiction to inquire into a complaint or try a charge against a European British subject constitute a privilege, that is to say, they are not so much words taking away jurisdiction entirely, as words which confer on the British subject a right to be tried by a certain class of Magistrates and by no others, which right the Code enables him to give up. S. 84 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be construed strictly with s. 72, and before a European British subject can be considered to have waived the privilege conferred upon him by s. 72, it must appear that his rights under that section have been distinctly made known to him, and that he must have been enabled to exercise his choice and judgment whether he would or would not claim those rights. The waiver of privilege spoken of in s. 84 must be an absolute giving up of all the rights, with reference to Ch. VII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which a European British subject has; and the words "dealt with as such before the Magistrate" mean everything contained in the chapter,—that is to say, the tribunal having cognizance of the case, the procedure, and also the punishment to which the accused would be liable. In the matter of the petition of QUIROS. In a suit brought to recover possession of certain property, the Judge decided one of the issues raised in the plaintiff's favour, but on the important issue as to whether the plaintiff ever had possession, he found for the defendant. The plaintiff was not examined, but on the issue as to possession he called two witnesses. The Judge disbelieved their statements, and, considering that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case, gave judgment for the defendant without requiring him to give evidence on that issue. In the concluding paragraph of his judgment, the Judge directed the depositions of the two witnesses above referred to, together with the English memoranda, of their evidence, to be sent to the Magistrate, with a view to his enquiring whether or not they had voluntarily given false evidence in a judicial proceeding; and he further directed the Magistrate to enquire whether or not the plaintiff had abetted the offence of giving false evidence, on the ground that, as the witnesses were the plaintiff's servants, he must personally have influenced them, and also to enquire whether the plaint which the plaintiff had attested contained averments which he knew to be false. On a motion to quash this order: Held, that, under s. 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Judge had no power to send a case to a Magistrate except when, after having made such preliminary enquiry as may be necessary, he is of opinion that there is sufficient ground (i.e., ground of a nature higher than mere surmise or suspicion) for directing judicial enquiry into the matter of a specific charge, and that the Judge is bound to indicate the particular statements or averments in respect of which he considers that there is ground for a charge into which the Magistrate ought to enquire, and that the order was bad because the Judge had made no preliminary enquiry, and because it was too vague and general in its character. 5. ——— Power of and procedure of Court in making order under section—Order directing prosecution. Before a Court is justified in making an order under s. 476, directing the prosecution of any person, it ought to have before it direct evidence, fixing the offence upon the person whom it is sought to charge, either in the course of the preliminary enquiry referred to in that section or in the earlier proceedings out of which the enquiry arises. It is not sufficient that the evidence in the earlier case may induce some sort of suspicion that the person had been guilty of an offence; but there must be distinct evidence of the commission of an offence by the person who is to be prosecuted. Queen v. *Baijoo Lall, I. 9. ——— Institution of criminal prosecution pending appeal in Civil Court. If, in the course of a proceeding, either civil or criminal, a Judge or Magistrate finds clear ground for believing that either the parties to the proceeding or their witnesses have committed perjury or any other offence against public justice, he is justified in directing criminal proceedings against such person under s. 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code without any further enquiry than that which he has already held in his own Court. As a matter of discretion and propriety, it is right for a Court, before committing a person on a charge of perjury upon his own uncontradicted statement, to await the hearing of the appeal, where an appeal is pending, in the case in which he is charged with such perjury. In the matter of MUTTY LALL GHOSE . . I. 12. ——— Preliminary enquiry. An order made under s. 471 of Act X of 1872, sending a case for enquiry to a Magistrate is not necessarily bad because the Court did not make a preliminary enquiry before making such order. The law requires only such preliminary enquiry as "may be necessary." Held, therefore, where a Munsif, being of opinion that both the parties to a suit tried by him had given false evidence therein on certain points, sent the case for enquiry to the Magistrate under s. 471 of Act X of 1872, with a proceeding embodying the facts of the case, and charging the parties respectively with giving false evidence on such points, and there was nothing to show that any enquiry that the Munsif could have made was necessary or would have put the Magistrate into a better position for dealing with the case than he was in, that the Munsif's proceedings were not bad because he did not hold a preliminary enquiry. On an application made to the District Judge for revocation of the sanction, he made an order revoking the sanction, and sent the case, under s. 476, to the District Magistrate for inquiry or trial. Held, that, in granting the sanction, the Subordinate Judge did not act judicially, and the District Judge, in revoking the sanction, was not holding a judicial proceeding, and the order under s. 476, Code of Criminal Procedure, was consequently bad. The Deputy Collector reported that the petitioner had failed to prove the execution of the kabuliyat by B, and that it was not genuine. Upon that report, and after hearing the parties, the Collector made an order sanctioning the prosecution of the petitioner under s. 471 or some cognate section of the Penal Code. In his order the Collector stated that the inquiry by the Deputy Collector was held on his behalf as a Revenue Court under s. 476, Code of Criminal Procedure. Held, that the order for prosecution was made without jurisdiction, as neither the Collector nor the Deputy Collector acted as a Court, and the inquiry by the latter was not a judicial inquiry, having been held solely for the purpose of determining who should be called on to pay stamp duty. The Deputy Magistrate examined R and G, and having satisfied himself that the marriage had actually taken place submitted the case for orders before the District Magistrate, who dismissed the application. The District Magistrate upon a subsequent application, in which the story of the marriage was challenged as false, held a local enquiry and came to the conclusion that G and R had given false evidence before the Deputy Magistrate and ordered their prosecution for perjury. Held, that the alleged offence of perjury had not been brought to the notice of the District Magistrate in a "judicial proceeding" within the meaning of s. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the order for prosecution was made without jurisdiction. 21. ——— Order for prosecution—Power of successor in office to make order—"Court." The summary power conferred by s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) can be exercised by the Judge who tries the case in the course of the trial of which the alleged offence is committed, and such power is exerciseable only at, or immediately after, the conclusion of the trial ; an application for sanction under s. 195 of the Code can be made later on as an entirely different and independent proceeding. To give true effect to the whole of the language of s. 476 the expression "Court" can only mean the Judge who tries the case. Krishna Gobinda Dutt, In the matter of, 9 C. W. N. 859, is rightly decided. Per GEIDT, J.—The terms of s. 476 indicates that the desirability of prosecuting the offender must be present to the mind of the Court during the proceedings in the course of which the offence was committed or brought to its notice. It was never intended that when the proceedings had terminated, the attention of the Court should be subsequently drawn by some private person to the fact that in those proceedings there had been committed some offence in contempt of the Court's authority or against public justice which deserved punishment. But no universal rule can be laid down that in no case can the order for a prosecution be made by an officer other than that before whom the offence was committed. Emperor v. *Molla Fuzla Karim, I. (2) provides the procedure to be followed when the law has been put in motion. Per MILLER, J.—There is nothing to make s. 476 inapplicable to any case to which the language of the section applies. The procedure provided by the section is not incompatible with the commencement of action by the Court after the close of the proceeding in the course of which an offence is committed or disclosed. Per SANKARAN-NAIR, J.—A Court may grant sanction at any time and to any person whom it considers fit to carry on the prosecution and who is entitled to proceed under s. 190, Criminal Procedure Code. The order under s. 476 is a judicial proceeding and not a complaint under s. 195. Per PINHEY, J.—Ss. 195 and 476 must be read together and s. 476 prescribes the procedure to be adopted by the Courts when making a complaint, it was however the intention of the Legislature to restrict their power in this direction and only to suffer it when promptly exercised. The decision in the case of Rahimadulla Sahib, I. L. R. 31 Mad. 140, does not decide that the final order under s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code must issue at once. The Court must commence to take action under the section promptly, in which case it may be considered as a continuation of the proceedings ; and although the final order may be delayed for some time by necessary enquiries, the order will not be bad for want of jurisdiction. The presenting of a petition imputing improper motives to a Magistrate, who is illegally detaining a person to take recognizances from him to enforce his attendance for the foregoing purpose will not justify any action by such Magistrate under s. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as the offence is not committed in the course of a judicial proceeding, nor is it brought to his notice in the course of such proceeding. prosecute—Penal Code, s. 210. A complainant applied to a Munsif for sanction to prosecute a decree-holder for an offence under s. 210 of the Penal Code, and upon the Munsif's refusing such application preferred an appeal to the District Judge, who granted the sanction asked for. The decree-holder having been prosecuted and convicted before a Deputy Magistrate, preferred an appeal which came on for hearing before and was disposed of by the same District Judge who had granted the sanction. Held, that the words "shall try any person," as used in s. 487 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, include the hearing of an appeal, and that the hearing of the appeal from the order of the Munsif refusing sanction was a judicial proceeding within the meaning of the Code, and consequently that, under the provisions of s. 487, the District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal against the judgment and sentence passed by the Deputy Magistrate. In the matter of MADHUB CHUNDER MOZUMDAR v. NOVODEEP CHUNDER PUNDIT

The ornaments had been found upon search in the accused's own premises. Whilst convicting the accused the Magistrate passed an order confiscating the ornaments. Held, that such an order could not be made under s. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The object of the section is to enable the Magistrate to direct property to be given to some person to whom it appears to belong or to allow it to continue in the possession of the person, in whose possession it was found or to make some order of that character. The words "which has been used for the commission of any offence" refer to cases of the same nature, i.e., to instruments like guns or swords produced in Court. A printing press cannot be said to have been used for the commission of sedition, inasmuch as the offence consists in the publication, and not the printing, the press being only a remote instrument. 1. —————— Transfer—Fair trial—Reasonable apprehension. It is expedient for the ends of justice to direct the transfer of a criminal case from one Court to another if circumstances have so transpired as to lead the accused to entertain a reasonable apprehension that he may not have a fair trial. In making such an order the High Court considered the convenience of the other side and directed the Crown to pay the expenses of his witnesses. 2. —————— Transfer—Rioting—Possession, question of—Magistrate forming his opinion before trial. The High Court made an order transferring a case of rioting from the file of a Magistrate who, before the trial commenced, had expressed a decisive opinion on the question of the possession of the property in relation to which the riot was said to have taken place, that being a most important question in the case. SITA NATH MONDAL v. EMPEROR (1904) 8 C. W. N. 641

3. —————— Transfer—Heavy bail—Fair trial, reasonable apprehension of not having. Where in a case of an alleged petty theft the Magistrate issued warrants in the first instance and then exacted heavy bail from the accused persons: Held, that the accused were justified in apprehending that they would not have a fair trial before the Magistrate. (8)—Transfer—Adjournment—"Commencement of hearing," meaning of—Trial commenced before one Magistrate—Transfer of Magistrate—Case taken up by another Magistrate—Application for adjournment, if can be made to him—Grounds for allowing transfer—Possible apprehension of bias. The words "commencement of the hearing" in s. 526, cl. (8) of the Criminal Procedure Code mean the commencement of the hearing in the Court objected to, i.e., in the Court to which the notification subsequently referred to in the section applies or is made. A Magistrate was transferred at a certain stage of a case which he was trying, and it was then taken up by the District Magistrate. The prosecution wishing to obtain a transfer of the case applied to him for an adjournment at the earliest possible time. The District Magistrate rejected the application, and proceeding with the trial acquitted the accused. Held, that the application fell within s. 526, cl. (8) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and should not have been refused and all the proceedings before the District Magistrate subsequent to the refusal were bad and should be set aside. Surat Lal Chowdhuri v. Emperor, I. L. R. 29 Calc. 211, followed. The transfer was sought by the prosecution on the allegation that the Bettiah Raj, which was under the Court of Wards, had an interest in the case, and the District Magistrate, who was one of the chief executive authorities connected with the Court of Wards, ought not to try it. Held, that there were sufficient grounds for granting a transfer. Where it is impossible to prevent persons from having an apprehension that there might be some bias in the mind of the Magistrate inclining him to look with favour upon the interest of any party, a transfer should be granted. 6. —————— cl. (8)—Adjournment of case—Supplementary case, disqualification of Sessions Judge to try. The accused were committed for trial on the 12th December 1903. Trial was fixed for the 3rd February 1904 before the Sessions Judge. On the 3rd February the accused asked the Judge to refer the case to the High Court for transfer, on the ground that the Judge had previously convicted other accused persons on the same facts. This was refused. The accused thereupon applied under s. 526, cl. (8), of the Criminal Procedure Code, for an adjournment of the case, on the ground that the High Court would be moved for a transfer. This was also refused. The case proceeded, and after the case for the prosecution was concluded, two witnesses were examined on behalf of one of the accused and the case was adjourned till the 16th February. Between the 3rd and 16th February no application was made to the High Court for a transfer. The case was concluded on the 16th February and the accused were convicted. Held, that the Sessions Judge was not disqualified from trying the case. That the accused had reasonable time for applying to the High Court before they were required to enter upon their defence on the 16th February and, as they abstained from doing so, the proceedings of the Sessions Judge were not void. The Deputy Magistrate brought the complaint to the notice of the District Magistrate, who, without recording his reasons for so doing, but in obedience to an order of Government, transferred the case to his own file. The District Magistrate also called upon the officer accused to report as to any reason which he knew for the complaint having been made against him. This report was placed on the record, and was used, as the Magistrate stated in his order, to supply grounds for cross-examining the witnesses produced by the complainant. Held, that omission on the part of the Magistrate to record his reasons for transferring the case was not under the circumstances more than an irregularity, and that his action in calling for a report from the Sub-Inspector and the use made of that report were not improper. Baidya Nath Singh. v. *Muspratt, I. ——— Section applies to cases where Magistrate tries in respect of offences committed outside his jurisdiction. There is nothing in the language of s. 531 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to confine its operation to cases where offences committed within the jurisdiction of a Court are tried by such Court outside the limits of the local area of its jurisdiction. A finding, sentence or order regularly passed by a Court in the case of an offence committed outside its local area, cannot be set aside when no failure of justice has taken place. ——— s. 551—Unlawful detention for an unlawful purpose—Infant, custody of. A Hindu girl, under the age of 14 years, went of her own accord to a Mission house, where she was received and allowed to remain. The mother and husband of the girl thereupon applied to the Magistrate, who took proceedings under s. 551 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The lady superintendent of the Mission house denied that the girl was legally married, and alleged that she was practically being brought up with the connivance of the mother to a life of prostitution. The Magistrate, after recording evidence, found that the girl was legally married; that the other allegation was not established; and that, although she went to and remained in the Mission house of her own free will, there was, under the circumstances, an unlawful detention for an unlawful purpose. He further found that there were no facts established which would disentitle the husband or the mother to the custody of the girl, and passed an order under the section directing the girl to be restored to her mother. Held, that, upon the facts as found by the Magistrate, as it was immaterial whether the girl did or did not consent to remain at the Mission house, there was an unlawful detention within the meaning of these words as used in the section, as the girl was kept against the will of those who were lawfully entitled to have charge of her. Held, also, that s. 551 applying only, as it does, to women and female children, must not be construed so as to make it include purposes which, although not unlawful in themselves, might only become so when entertained towards a child in opposition to the wishes of its guardian, but that the purpose, whether entertained towards a woman or a female child, must be in itself unlawful. Held, consequently, that in the circumstances of the case there was no detention for an unlawful purpose, and that the Magistrate had no power to make the order. Held, further, that, although the Magistrate had no power under the section to make the order he did, it did not follow that the Court should direct the girl to be restored to the custody of the lady superintendent, even if it had the power to do so, and that, having regard to the circumstances of the case, there was nothing to justify such an order being passed. The prisoner and his pleaders were alleged to have stated before the commencement of the trial on being questioned that they had no objection to the composition of the Bench, but after the charges had been framed, the prisoner's counsel objected to the Bench as formed. The District Magistrate directed the Government pleader to prosecute, and both the District Magistrate and L gave evidence for the prosecution. After the case for the prosecution was closed, two formal charges were drawn up, namely, that the prisoner had debited Government with the price of more oil-seed than he actually purchased, and that he had received payment for certain oil at a higher rate than he credited to Government. The moneys, the receipt of which were the subject of the first charge, were obtained by the prisoner on the strength of certain vouchers which he had induced L to sign as correct, and L had sanctioned the sale at the rates credited to Government. Upon the prisoner's giving the names of the witnesses, he intended to call in his defence, L was deputed by his brother Magistrates to examine some of them who were connected with the jail, in order "to guard against deviation," and the depositions so taken were placed on the record, "to be used by either party, though not themselves, as evidence." The prisoner was convicted. On a motion to quash the conviction:—Held, that the recording the statements of the prisoner's witnesses was irregular. Criminal proceedings are bad unless they are conducted in the manner prescribed by law, and if they are substantially bad, the defect will not be cured by any waiver or consent of the prisoner. 4. ——— Bias of Judge—Magistrate's jurisdiction where complainant is his private servant—Legality of conviction and sentence passed by such Magistrate in such a case. The mere circumstance that a trying Magistrate is the master of the complaint does not deprive the Magistrate of his jurisdiction, though it is expedient that such a complaint should be referred to another Magistrate. In re the petition of BASAPA I. L. R. 9 Bom. 172

5. ——— Summary jurisdiction wrongly exercised—Unlawful assembly armed with deadly weapons—Splitting offence—Right of appeal, deprivation of. No Magistrate is entitled to split up an offence into its component parts for the purpose of giving himself summary jurisdiction. If a charge of an offence not triable summarily is laid and sworn to, the Magistrate must proceed with the case accordingly, unless he is at the outset in a position to show from the deposition of the complainant that the circumstances of aggravation are really mere exaggeration and not to be believed. Therefore, a Magistrate, when he has before him a person charged with having been armed with a deadly weapon while a member of an unlawful assembly, is not at liberty to disregard that part of the charge which charges the prisoner with having been armed with a deadly weapon, and so to give himself jurisdiction to try the case summarily, and then by inflicting a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding three months to deprive the prisoner of his right of appeal. Such a course is different to disregarding part of a charge for the purpose of dealing with a case summarily. 7. ——— Objectionable procedure—Accused affirmed and examined—Appointment of Magistrate who convicted accused, to be Crown Prosecutor—Right of prisoners to converse privately with pleader—Magistrates sitting on bench in Judge's Court during trial. Upon an inquiry which the High Court directed the Sessions Judge to make into an allegation that a confession was made under such circumstances as to be inadmissible in evidence, the prisoners were ordered to be, and were, solemnly affirmed and the prosecution neither objected to the form of the order nor to the affirmation of the prisoners, and, moreover, cross-examined them, but objected to their evidence being used upon the return of the inquiry. It was held that the objection, though possibly good if taken in time, was too late, and that the evidence of the prisoners might be used, whether the order directing them to be affirmed was correct or otherwise. The appointment of the Magistrate, who, in the first instance, had tried and convicted the accused, to be Crown Prosecutor to conduct an enquiry subsequently directed in the same case, censured as being unprecedented and objectionable. A Public Prosecutor should be without a personal interest in the cases which he conducts. Prisoners should be allowed to have free converse with their vakils out of the hearing of the police officers in charge of such prisoners. It is undesirable that Magistrates whose decisions are under appeal, or who have been engaged in promoting the prosecution, or police officers concerned in a case, should sit on the bench beside, or converse privately in Court with, the Judge who is engaged in trying the prisoner's appeal. If the Appellate Judge wishes to ascertain any facts relating to the case from the Magistrate who convicted the accused, he should examine the Magistrate upon oath or solemn affirmation, in the same manner as an ordinary witness. Consequently, where a Magistrate enquires into and commits for trial an offence which has not been committed in his district, and the Court of Session for that district accepts such commitment because the prisoner has not been prejudiced thereby, and tries him for such offence, the proceedings in such case are illegal ab initio. 17. ——— Title, question of—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, ss. 491, 530—Dispute likely to cause breach of the peace—Decision on title by Civil Court—Police report, incorporation of, by reference. On the 20th of March 1879, A applied to have certain lands, which he had lately purchased, registered in his name. The order of the Deputy Collector, declaring that A had proved possession and was entitled to registration, was not passed until the 24th December 1879. Prior to A's purchase, B and C had, on the 6th March 1879, obtained registration of the same property. The proceedings were sent to the Commissioner, who, on the 29th September 1880, declared A to be entitled to the land; and in October the registration in the names of B and C was cancelled, and A's name was finally registered. In July 1880, proceedings under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code were commenced upon the petition of certain raiyats, who alleged that other raiyats, at the instigation of A, were going to do acts which would lead to a breach of the peace. The Deputy Magistrate, the same person who, as Deputy Collector, had decided the land-registration case in favour of A, proceeded under s. 530 to consider the question as to who was in possession, and found B and C were in possession. Held, that the Deputy Magistrate could not, in these proceedings, set aside the order which he had made in the registration case, as that order could only be set aside in a regular suit. The proceedings recorded by the Deputy Magistrate did not set forth in express language that he was satisfied that a dispute likely to create a breach of the peace existed in respect of the land in question between A on the one side and B and C on the other, nor did it set forth the grounds upon which he was so satisfied that such dispute existed. Held, that the proceeding was therefore defective. In the proceedings the Magistrate referred to a police report, which, however, did not show that a breach of the peace was imminent. Held, that, although this report might be taken to be incorporated by reference, yet that it was not sufficient to justify the order. Per FIELD, J.—Unless the parties are able to show that there is such a dispute as is likely to induce a breach of the peace, the Magistrate should hold his hand and not proceed further. When the rights of the parties have been determined by a competent Court, the dispute is at an end, and it is the duty of the Magistracy to maintain the rights of the successful party, and the proper course for the Magistrate to pursue, if the defeated party does any act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace, is to take action under s. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and require from such person security to keep the peace. In re GOBIND CHUNDER MOITRA

After the close of the case for the prosecution in one of these cases, the Sessions Judge, with the consent of the pleaders representing the accused, postponed the taking of the evidence for the defence, and proceeded to examine the witnesses for the prosecution in the counter-case before the same jury. The Court then took the evidence of the witnesses for the defence in the first, and in the counter-case, in the order named, and after hearing the address of the various pleaders for the defence and the reply of the Governmnet pleader, proceeded to sum up the fact in both cases to the jury, who returned a verdict in respect of all the accused. Held, that the procedure resorted to by the Judge was a practical violation of the salutary rule which necessitated the keeping of trials in such cases distinctly separate, and that its adoption having materialy prejudiced the interests of the accused, the convictions should be set aside. Queen v. Bazu, *B. 25. ——— Joint trial—Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 107, 112, 117, 118, 239, 537—Opposing factions dealt with in one proceeding. Upon general principles, every person is entitled, in the absence of exceptional authority conferred by the law to the contrary effect, when required by the judiciary either to forfeit his liberty or to have his liberty qualified, to insist that his case shall be tried separately from the cases of other persons similarly circumstanced. Where an order has been passed under s. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code requiring more persons than one to show cause why they should not severally furnish security for keeping the peace, the provisions of s. 239 read with s. 117 are applicable, subject to such modifications as the latter section indicates, and to such procedure as the exigencies of each individual case may render advisable in the interests of justice. A joint inquiry in the case of such persons is, therefore, not ipso facto illegal; and even in cases where one and the same proceeding taken by the Magistrate under ss. 107, 112, 117, and 118 improperly deals with more persons than one, the matter must be considered upon the individual merits of the particular case, and would at most amount to an irregularity which, according to the particular circumstances, might or might not be covered by the provisions of s. 537. Queen-Empress v. *Nathu, I. Procedure Code (1882), s. 289, s. 423, cl. (d), and s. 537—Misdirection to jury. The formality of calling upon an accused person to enter on his defence under the provisions of s. 289 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not a mere formality, but is an essential part of a criminal trial. 59. ——— Application for transfer—Adjournment of case—Ground for adjournment—Order of transfer by High Court brought to notice of Court by telegram to vakil—Absence of witnesses—Criminal Procedure Code (1882), ss. 344, 526, and 526A. The trial of a charge under s. 193, Penal Code, was fixed for the November sessions, but on the 17th October 1895, on prisoner's application, the trial was adjourned to the 2nd December 1895. On 20th November, the prisoner's vakil put in a petition, alleging that he had moved the High Court for a transfer, of the case. On this petition coming on for disposal, the prisoner's vakil moved orally for an adjournment under s. 526A, Criminal Procedure Code, which was refused. On the 30th November, the prisoner's vakil put in a petition, in which he prayed for an adjournment under s. 526A. This petition was refused, and the trial began on the 2nd December, and judgment was written and pronounced on the 5th December. In the meantime, an application had been made to the High Court for a transfer, and that petition was disposed of on the 4th December by an order granting the transfer prayed, the High Court apparently being not aware that the trial was at that time proceeding before the Sessions Court. On the 5th December, after the trial in the Sessions Court was concluded, and before judgment was delivered, a fresh petition was presented for an adjournment on the ground that a telegram had been received from the High Court transferring the case, but the Sessions Judge refused to act upon it in the absence of orders from the High Court, and delivered judgment convicting the prisoner. During the trial before the Sessions Court, the prisoner applied for an adjournment on the ground that two witnesses for the defence were absent, one being too ill to attend, the other not having been served with the summons; but the Sessions Judge, considering the application was made merely for purposes of delay and to defeat the ends of justice, and that their evidence would not be material, refused to adjourn the case for their evidence to be recorded. Held, that s. 526A, Criminal Procedure Code, is imperative, but that the object of ss. 344 and 526, when read together, is merely to give a party reasonable time to move the High Court and obtain its orders; and that in the present case there was sufficient time for such application to have been made, if due diligence had been observed. Held, also that the order for transfer made on the 4th December, which, in fact, did not reach the Judge till after judgment was pronounced, did not vitiate the proceedings; and that the Sessions Judge was not wrong in refusing to adjourn the case on the strength of a telegram said to have been received by prisoner's vakil stating that the High Court has ordered a transfer. Held, further, that the Sessions Judge ought not to have refused to adjourn the case in order to obtain the evidence of the two absent witnesses, and that their evidence was material and must be recorded and certified to the High Court under s. 428, Criminal Procedure Code. 61. ——— Jurisdiction—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 530, cl. (p)—Offence originally cognizable by a second class Magistrate subsequently non-cognizable by reason of an aggravating circumstance—Duty of inferior Court. The accused were charged before a Magistrate of the second class with causing grievous hurt as members of an unlawful assembly under ss. 149 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code. The evidence showed that one of the accused had used an axe in causing the hurt. The Magistrate apparently ignored this fact, and he convicted the accused under s. 325 of the Code. The accused appealed. The District Magistrate who heard one appeal and the first class Magistrate who heard the rest of the appeals, were both of opinion that the offence committed by the accused was one of causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon within the meaning of s. 326 of the Penal Code, and as such beyond the jurisdiction of the second class Magistrate. But they did not think it proper under the circumstances of the case to quash the convictions. The Sessions Judge, on examining the record of the case, was of opinion that, as the offence committed by the accused was not cognizable by the trying Magistrate, his proceedings were void ab initio under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He, therefore, referred the case to the High Court, and recommended that the convictions under s. 325 should be set aside. Held, that the proceedings before the second class Magistrate were not void ab initio, as he had jurisdiction to try the accused for offences punishable under ss. 149 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code, with which they were originally charged. Held, also, that, though it was the duty of the trying Magistrate, when the evidence disclosed a circumstance of aggravation, such as the use of a dangerous weapon, which made the offence cognizable by a higher Court, to adopt the proper procedure to send the case to the higher Court, still it was not necessary to quash the proceedings, as the accused were not in any way prejudiced, and the sentences were not inadequate. The third class Magistrate thereupon tried and convicted the accused under s. 174 of the Penal Code. The District Magistrate referred the case on the ground that the conviction was bad under s. 530 (k) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held, that, as the yadast amounted to a complaint within the meaning of s. 4, although the complainant was not examined on oath as required by s. 200, the conviction was not illegal. The woman alleged to have been enticed away resided in Bombay, but the alleged adultery took place at Khandala outside the jurisdiction. At the enquiry before the Magistrate in Bombay, objection was taken as to his jurisdiction with regard to the charge of adultery. The Magistrate, however, overruled the objections and committed the accused for trial. At the trial an application was made, on behalf of the accused, under s. 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882) that the commitment should be quashed and a fresh enquiry directed on the ground that an objection had been taken to the Magistrate's jurisdiction. Held, refusing the application, that the commitment being an order (see Queen-Empress v. Thaku, I. L. R. 8 Bom. 312) under s. 531 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the commitment should not be quashed unless a failure of justice would be caused by proceeding with the trial. Certain property was attached in execution of a decree. Thereupon accused No. 1 applied to have the attachment raised on the ground that he had purchased the property from the judgment-debtor under a sale-deed executed long before the date of the attachment. In the summary inquiry, which was made under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), he produced the sale-deed, and accused No. 2 was called as his witness and supported his claim. The Subordinate Judge found that the deed was a forgery and rejected the claim. Proceeding then under s. 478 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), he held the inquiry directed by that section, and committed both the accused to the Sessions Court on charges of perjury and forgery. During the pendency of the inquiry under s. 478, the accused No. 1 filed a civil suit to establish the genuineness of the sale-deed and set aside the attachment. He also applied to the High Court to quash the commitment or stay the criminal proceedings, pending the disposal of the civil suit. Held, refusing the application, that the mere fact that a regular suit was filed to establish the genuineness of the sale-deed was not a sufficient ground for quashing the commitment, or for adjourning the trial pending the hearing of the civil suit. In re DEVJI VALAD BHAVANI I. order quashing the proceedings before a Magistrate. No section of the Criminal Procedure Code expressly authorizes the High Court to quash pending proceedings. Per GHOSE, J.—A proceeding in a Criminal Court should not, as a general rule, be stayed pending the decision of the civil suit in regard to the same subject-matter; but ordinarily it is not desirable, if the parties to the two proceedings are substantially the same, and the prosecution is but a private prosecution, and the issues in the two Courts are substantially identical, that both the cases should go on at one and the same time. It is open to the Magistrate, having regard to the facts of the case before him, to consider whether it is not desirable that the proceedings in his Court should be stayed, till the decision of the civil suit or for a limited period of time; and it is also open to him to put the defendant on terms as to appearance or otherwise, if he does stay proceedings. The High Court has the power to order a Magistrate to stay proceedings in his Court, if a sufficient cause in that behalf is made out. But inasmuch as the Legislature has given him the power to regulate the proceedings in his own Court, the direction should ordinarily be left to him either to stay proceedings or not as he, in the circumstances of each case, may think right and proper. One of the accused had made a confessional statement before the Magistrate who recorded it, but did not make on it a memorandum to the effect stated in Criminal Procedure Code, s. 164, and did not admit it in evidence for the reasons that the accused was produced from the custody of the police in which he had been detained for five days, and there was a proposal on the part of the police to treat him as an approver. It appeared that a perusal of the preliminary register would have shown that the accused were either guilty under s. 396 or not guilty under s. 395 at all. The accused were tried by the Sessions Judge with a jury. The confessional statement was not admitted in evidence. The jury found the accused not guilty of dacoity, but the Judge, disagreeing with the verdict, referred the case to the High Court under Criminal Procedure Code, s. 307. Held, (i) that the procedure adopted by the Judge was wrong, and that he should have tried the accused with the aid of assessors under Indian Penal Code, s. 396; (ii) that the Judge should have enquired under Criminal Procedure Code, s. 533, whether the confessional statement had been duly made; and (iii) that, under the circumstances, the High Court should determine on the evidence on record, after giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury, whether the accused were guilty under s. 395. The latter then sanctioned their prosecution for giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding, an offence punishable under s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and triable by a Magistrate of the first class. The Deputy Magistrate, by whom they were tried, convicted them, and the accused appealed, the appeals being transferred to another Sessions Court for hearing. The Sessions Judge held that, inasmuch as the false statements had been made in connection with a charge of murder, the offence for which the accused should have been tried fell under s. 194, Indian Penal Code, and that, in consequence, they could be tried only by a Court of Session, and not by a Magistrate of the first class. He considered their trial by a first class Magistrate to be void under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and set aside their conviction, committing one of them for trial by a Court of Session on a charge under s. 194 of the Indian Penal Code, and making no order in respect of the other accused, as he considered the imprisonment already undergone was sufficient. Held, that the order was wrong, as the proceedings of the First-class Magistrate were not void within the meaning of s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen-Empress v. *Gundya, I. 1. ——— Penal Code, s. 441—Intention to annoy. To bring an act of trespass within the meaning of the Penal Code, s. 441, the entry upon the land must be with the intent to annoy, which means with the purpose of annoying the person in possession. In the matter of the petition of SHIB NATH BANERJEE . 24 W. R. Cr. 58

2. ——— Intention to annoy—Being on land in assertion of title. Where the trespass (if any) was not committed with the intent to commit an offence, or intimidate, insult, or annoy the persons in possession, but in the bond fide assertion of a claim of title, this does not amount to criminal trespass. QUEEN v. SEITH ROSHUN LAL

3. ——— Intention to annoy—Causing loss or injury. A built a hut on portion of certain disputed land to which he laid claim and was, on the prosecution of another claimant to the land, convicted of criminal trespass under s. 441 of the Penal Code. Held, that the conviction was bad, as in erecting the hut it was not the intention of the accused to annoy. Loss or injury would naturally cause annoyance, but not the kind of annoyance contemplated by s. 441 of the Penal Code. SHUMBHU NATH SARKAR v. RAM KAMAL GUHA

4. ——— Intention to annoy—Enclosing and cultivating portion of burial-ground. Defendant was convicted of criminal trespass for having enclosed and commenced to cultivate a portion of a burial-ground. Held, that the conviction was right. The person (corporate) in possession of the burial-ground is the portion of the public entitled to use the burial-ground, and the act of ploughing up the burial-ground was evidence of intent to annoy such person, the defendant not being one of the portion of the public entitled to its use. ANONYMOUS . . . 6 Mad. Ap. 25

5. ——— Intention to annoy—Taking portion of public foot-path as one's own land. Defendant was convicted of criminal trespass for including in his own land a portion of a public foot-path. Held, that, as the public generally were entitled to the use of the foot-path, there was no illegal entry of the defendant on property in the possession of another with intent to annoy the person in possession, and consequently that the defendant was wrongly convicted. ANONYMOUS . . 6 Mad. Ap. 26

6. ——— Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 341, 352, 448—Wrongful restraint, house-trespass, and assault—Entry into premises purchased at a Sheriff's sale, whether lawful. That the entry by a person into premises purchased by him at a Sheriff's sale for the purpose of acquiring possession is not an unlawful entry within the meaning of s. 441 of the Penal Code. 9. ——— Land dispute—Title to land, failure to prove. Held, by JACKSON, J. (setting aside the order of the Magistrate; MARKBY, J., dissenting), that a Magistrate ought not to decline to go into a case of criminal trespass under s. 441 of the Penal Code because the complainant did not make out his title to the land: the offence may be committed in respect of property in a person's possession, even though such possession may not have originated in right. 10. ——— Entry into family dwelling-house. Entrance of a member of a Hindu joint family into the family dwelling-house is not criminal trespass. 12. ——— Unlawful entry to exhibition building. Where the accused secretly entered an exhibition building without having purchased a ticket, and was there apprehended:—Held, that such entry, when unaccompanied by any of the intents specified in s. 441 of the Penal Code, did not amount to criminal trespass or any other criminal offence. REG. v. MEHERVANJI BEJANJI 6 Bom. Cr. 6

13. ——— Entry in property and cutting trees. The entry by one man on another's property, accompanied by the cutting down of trees on that property, is criminal trespass. QUEEN v. JEENUT BEBEE . 1 W. R. Cr. 46

14. ——— Entering on land after decree giving another possession. Accused was ejman of complainant's family. Complainant obtained a decree setting aside an alienation made by accused. In execution, complainant obtained possession from the alienee. The accused entered on this land. Held, that he had not committed the offence of criminal trespass. ANNONYMOUS 6 Mad. Ap. 19

15. ——— Re-entry into, or remaining on, land from which person has been ejected by civil process. Certain immoveable property was the joint undivided property of C, G, and a certain other person. R obtained a decree against G, for the possession of such property, and such property was delivered to him in the execution of that decree in accordance with the provisions of

s. 264 of Act X of 1877. C, in good faith, with the intention of asserting her right, and without any intention to intimidate, insult, or annoy R, or to commit an offence, and G, in like manner, with the intention of asserting the right of his co-owners, remained on such property. Held, that, under such circumstances, they could not be convicted of criminal trespass. Re-entry into or remaining upon land from which a person has been ejected by civil process, or of which possession has been given to another for the purpose of asserting rights he may have solely or jointly with other persons, is not criminal trespass, unless the intent to commit an offence, or to intimidate, insult, or annoy, is conclusively proved. In the matter of the petition of GOBIND PRASAD . . I. L. R. 2 All. 435

19. ——— Entry on land in exercise of claim of right—Mischief. If a person enters on land in the possession of another in the exercise of a bonâ fide claim of right, and without any intention to intimidate, insult, or annoy such other person, or to commit an offence, then, though he may have no right to the land, he cannot be convicted of criminal trespass. So, also, if a person deals injuriously with property in the bonâ fide belief that it is his own, he cannot be convicted of mischief. The mere assertion, however, in such cases of a claim of right is not in itself a sufficient answer to charges of criminal trespass and mischief. It is the duty of the Criminal Court to determine what was the intention of the alleged offender, and if it arrives at the conclusion that he was not acting in the exercise of a bonâ fide claim of right, then it cannot refuse to convict the offender, assuming that the other facts are established which constitute the offence. EMPRESS OF INDIA. v. BUDH SINGH . . I. L. R. 2 All. 101

17. ——— Acting in exercise of right of distraint—Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869), ss. 72, 74, 76. A, the servant of B, was convicted of criminal trespass in going upon the land of C, one of B's tenants, and preventing him from cutting his crops. B was convicted of abetment of criminal trespass. A and B pleaded that they were acting in the exercise of the legal right of distraint. It appeared that no written demand under s. 72 of the Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869) for the amount of the arrears, together with an account exhibiting the grounds on which demand had been made, was served on C, and that no written authority under s. 76 had been given by B to A. Held, that it lay upon A and B to show that they had conformed to the provisions of the law, or at least had acted with the bonâ fide intention of distraining the complainant's crops; and that the conviction was right. Held, also, that as under s. 74 standing crops and ungathered products may, notwithstanding distraint, be reaped and gathered by the cultivator, A had no right, even if he was acting bonâ fide, to restrain C from cutting his crops. 19. ——— Plying boat for hire near public ferry. A person plying a boat for hire at a distance of three miles from a public ferry cannot be said, with reference to such ferry, to commit "criminal trespass" within the meaning of that term in s. 441 of the Penal Code. 20. ——— Continuing exercise of right of fishery after prohibition. An act does not amount to criminal trespass under s. 441 of the Penal Code, unless it was committed with an intention of committing some offence, or of intimidating, insulting, or annoying some one. Where a party had been exercising a right of fishery for a considerable time, alleging a prescriptive right, the mere fact of continuing to do so after a notice of prohibition is not criminal trespass. In the matter of the petition of SHISTIDHUR PARUI

22. ——— House trespass—Possession of property the subject of criminal trespass—Penal Code, ss. 441, 442, and 448. C, a rate-payer in a municipality, who had filed a petition against an assessment which in his absence had been dismissed, entered a room where a Committee of the Municipal Commissioners were seated hearing and deciding petitions in assessment matters, ostensibly with the object of presenting a petition for the revision of his assessment. The Chairman of the Committee ordered him to leave the room, and on his refusal to do so, he was turned out. Outside the room in the verandah, he addressed the crowd complaining that no justice was to be obtained from the Committee. C was prosecuted on these facts at the instance of the Chairman of the Committee, and convicted of house trespass under s. 448 of the Penal Code. Held, that the conviction was wrong, and that no offence had been committed. The prosecution was bound to prove in order to support a conviction of a charge under s. 441 or s. 442 that the property trespassed upon was at the time in the possession of a complainant who could compound the offence under s. 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the complainant had failed to prove that the room was in his possession, and had in fact shown that he was merely sitting in it with other persons at the invitation and with the consent of the person, whoever he might be, who had the immediate right to such possession. Held, further, that even if the complainant could be held to be in possession of the room, there was no evidence of any intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult, or annoy any person, it appearing that the object of the accused in going into and remaining in the room was to endeavour to induce the complainant and his colleagues to reconsider their decision, the verbal insult on which the conviction was based having been uttered after C had left the room. CRIMINAL TRESPASS—contd.

23. ——— Penal Code, ss. 441, 456, 457, and 509—Lurking house-trespass by night—Intrusion on privacy—Intention—Charge, form of—Criminal Procedure Code (1882), ss. 221, 222, and 537. A conviction for lurking house trespass by night under s. 456 of the Penal Code is not bad for want of the specification of the intention in the charge, but one under s. 457 cannot be sustained without such specification. In a charge under the former section, though a guilty intention must be proved, it is not necessary to prove which of the several guilty intentions the accused had; it will be enough if it is shown that the intention must have been one or other of those specified in s. 441, though it may not be certain which it was. An accused person, the landlord of a house in which he occupied the lower flat, was found in the middle of the night in the room of the complainant, one of his tenants, upstairs, in which the complainant and his wife were at the time sleeping. Upon being detected, the accused was subjected to very severe statement, but did not utter a word of protestation of innocence or make any show of remonstrance, and when questioned said, "I have committed a fault, pardon me." He was arrested upon a charge under s. 456 of the Penal Code, the criminal intention alleged being that of committing theft. The charge framed by the Magistrate did not specify any intention, and the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the trespass was not committed by the accused, who was a wealthy man with that intention. He found, however, that the complainant had suppressed some important facts, and that he was not in his wife's room when the accused entered it, and relying on the decision in Koilash Chandra Chakrabarty v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R. 16 Calc. 657, he convicted the accused. On appeal, the Sessions Judge, though finding that the Magistrate's views were against the evidence, upheld the conviction without finding what specifically was the intention with which the entry was made. In revision, it was contended that the conviction was bad (i) because no guilty intention was set out in the charge; (ii) because no such intention was proved by the evidence; and (iii) because no such intention was specifically found by the Sessions Judge. Held, that the first contention was not sustainable for the reasons above stated. Even if it had been necessary to specify the intention in the charge, it would have to be shown under the provisions of s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that the omission had occasioned a failure of justice, and, having regard to the nature of the charge and the line of defence adopted, the accused had not in any way been prejudiced in his defence. Held, as regards the second contention, that though it was not certain what the precise intention of the accused was in committing the trespass, it was clear that it must have been with one or other of the intentions specified in s. 441 of the Penal Code, as, judging from the time, the place, and manner in which the trespass was committed and the conduct of the accused when discovered, it was impossible to suppose that the trespass could have been committed either unintentionally or with any innocent intention, and that it must have been committed with the intention of committing some offence, but that the accused was entitled to have it taken that it was with the least possible culpable intention, namely, an offence under s. 509 of the Penal Code. Held, as regards the third contention, that in exercising its powers under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it is open to the High Court to alter any finding and confirm a conviction, and that, if the evidence on the record in a case be sufficient to warrant a conviction, the Court would not be justified in setting such conviction aside, merely because the view taken of the evidence by the lower Court is not sustainable, or some fact which ought to have been found by that Court is not found, or found incorrectly. The High Court upheld the conviction. ANONYMOUS . . . 5 Mad. Ap. 17

26. ——— Penal Code, ss. 441 and 466—House-breaking by night—Intent. When a stranger, uninvited and without any right to be there, effects an entry in the middle of the night into the sleeping apartment of a woman, a member of a respectable household, and, when an attempt is made to capture him, uses great violence in his efforts to make good his escape, a Court should presume that the entry was made with an intent such as is provided for by s. 441 of the Penal Code. An accused person in the middle of the night effected an entry into a house occupied by two widows, members of a respectable family. On an alarm being given and an attempt made to capture him, he made use of great violence and effected his escape. Upon these facts he was charged with offences under ss. 456 and 323 of the Penal Code. The defence set up was an alibi, which was disbelieved by both the lower Courts. Neither Court found specially what was the intention with which the accused entered the house, but it was suggested that it was probably for the purpose of prosecuting an intrigue with one of the women. There was no evidence that he had been invited by her to go there. The lower Courts convicted the accused under s. 456. It was contended that, as the prosecution had failed to prove that the entry was made with intent to commit any offence, the conviction was illegal. Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the Court ought to presume that the entry was effected with such intent as is provided for by s. 441, and that the conviction should be upheld. In the matter of the petition of KOILASH CHANDRA CHAKRABARTY. They went (some of them armed) without the permission of the defendant, and in his absence and when the defendant's servant objected to their action, they persisted in their trespass and endeavour to prevent opposition by making false statements as to the authority under which they were acting. Held, that their actions amounted to criminal trespass. On an alarm being given, and an attempt made to capture him, he escaped. He was charged with an offence under s. 456 of the Penal Code. The defence set up was disbelieved by both the lower Courts. Neither Court found specifically what was the intention with which the accused entered the room, but it was suggested that it was probably for the purpose of prosecuting an intrigue with one of the women. There was no evidence that he had been invited by her to go there. The lower Courts convicted the accused under s. 456. It was contended that, as the prosecution had failed to prove that the entry was made with intent to commit any offence, the conviction was illegal. Held, that the facts proved were good evidence of an intent and of an intrusion on privacy within the meaning of s. 509 of the Penal Code, and that, therefore, the intent to commit an offence within the meaning of s. 441 was made out. Balmakand Ram v. Ghun-

Finding the door of the judgment-debtor's house shut, they entered his compound by passing through the complainant's house without his consent and notwithstanding his protest. Held, that the accused's act amounted to criminal trespass, for, when they trespassed on the complainant's house notwithstanding his protest, they must, as reasonable men, have known that they would annoy him. There is no presumption that a person intends what is merely a possible result of his action or a result which, though reasonably certain, is not known to him to be so; but it must be presumed that when a man voluntarily does an act, knowing at the time that in the natural course of events a certain result will follow, he intends to bring about that result. Queen v. *Hicklin, L. That under the circumstances the fact that the accused set up a title to the land did not make the case against him one of a civil nature, and take it outside the jurisdiction of a Criminal Court. Semble: Under s. 522, Criminal Procedure Code, whenever an accused is convicted of an offence attended by show of force, the Court has the power to order the person who has been dispossessed by the accused of any immoveable property by such show of criminal force to be restored to the possession of the same. Ram Chandra Boral v. *Jityandria, I. CROWN LANDS.

——— Alienation of Crown lands—22 & 23 Vict., cap. 41, etc.—Power of Governor in Council to alienate through authorised agent under dharkast rules—Alienation so made binding and irrevocable—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to determine validity of grant under dharkast rules—Assignment of waste, duly made in accordance with dharkast rules, not liable to revision by anyone. The Civil Courts have jurisdiction to determine whether a grant of land, alleged to have been made by an officer on behalf of the Crown, is binding on the Crown or persons claiming under it subsequent to the grant; and the mere fact that the alleged grant purports to have been made under the dharkast rules does not affect that jurisdiction. A grant which purports to have been made under the dharkast rules by an officer empowered by them to make it, is a grant made by a person authorised in that behalf, and has the validity of a grant made by the Governor in Council. Such an officer is an agent generally or specially appointed by the Governor in Council in that behalf; and his acts, if within the scope of his authority, are as binding on the Crown as if they had been done by the Governor in Council. Where such a grant has been made, the action of the officer to whom an appeal lies with reference to it, is final and binding on the Government, if his act was within the scope of his authority. His action is not subject to any other control. And when the proposal of an applicant is accepted by an officer duly authorised in that behalf by the dharkast rules, and the acceptance is communicated to the applicant, there is a valid contract and disposal of the land (unless the grant was procured by fraud, misrepresentation or mutual mistake as to any matter of fact essential to the agreement). Such a grant cannot, therefore, be annulled or revoked by the officer who made the grant, by his successor in office, or even by the Governor in Council. Such a grant is subject, under the rules, only to one condition, namely, it may be revoked or annulled by an officer of a higher grade, on an appeal being preferred to him. Where a man suddenly cut his wife's throat, it was held that, in order to establish that the act was not done under grave provocation so as to bring the case under excep. 1 of s. 300 of the Penal Code, it is not sufficient to state that the deceased ceased abusing the prisoner then, but it is necessary to show what interval elapsed between the time when the deceased ceased to speak and the instant when the prisoner attacked her. The offence in this case held to be culpable homicide. QUEEN v. NOKUL NUSHYO . . . . 7 W. R. Cr. 72

8. ——— Hasty and fatal blow. The prisoner, having struck the deceased a hasty but fatal blow with a stick in his hand at the time for abusing his mother, was held guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. QUEEN v. SULEEM . . . 1 W. R. Cr. 23

10. ——— Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 304—Culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Grave and sudden provocation. A person accused of murder under s. 302 of the Penal Code pleaded in defence that he had found his sister having illicit connection with a man named Thakuri, and had in a fit of passion killed them both on the spot. The statement being accepted was held to be a good plea of grave and sudden provocation so as to reduce the offence to one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 11. ——— Grave provocation—Husband finding wife in adultery. Two prisoners confessed that having caught the deceased in the act of having sexual intercourse with the wife of one of them, they then and there killed him. Held, that the grave provocation given reduced the crime from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. QUEEN v. GOUR CHUND POLIE . . . . 1 W. R. Cr. 17

12. ——— Grave provocation—Husband finding wife in adultery. Where a prisoner confessed that he did not supect his wife's fidelity ; that he left home on business ; that on his return he saw what convinced him of his wife's infidelity; and that, maddened at the sight, he killed both her and her paramour :—Held, that he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and that the case was one in which he ought to be treated with lenity. QUEEN v. BOODHOO 8 W. R. Cr. 38

13. ——— Grave provocation—Husband seeing wife seduced to adultery. The wife of the prisoner had been forcibly taken to the house of the deceased, a native physician, who alleged that her presence was necessary to the due performance of certain incantations. The prisoner, armed with a sword, and watching from the roof of the house, saw his wife being actually violated by the deceased. He jumped down from the roof, and struck deceased with his sword in several places, from the effects of which he died. Held, that the prisoner's conviction for murder could not be sustained. The offence committed was culpable homicide not amounting to murder. QUEEN v. RAMTAHAL KAHAR 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 33

14. ——— Grave provocation—Husband seeing wife in adultery—Deliberation. On a certain evening, M, a common workman, saw N committing adultery with his (M's) wife, and on the following morning, while labouring under the excitement provoked by their misconduct, came upon them eating food together, while his wife had neglected to provide food for M. M took up a bill-hook and killed N on the spot. Held, that, if M connected the subsequent conduct of N and his wife with their misconduct on the preceding evening and regarded it as implying an open avowal of their criminal relations, which, under the circumstances, he might have done, the provocation was sufficiently grave and sudden to deprive him of self-control, and to reduce the offence from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 15. ——— Right of private defence— Penal Code, ss. 97, 99, and 104. When the accused whose property had frequently been stolen, went out with a latee to watch his property, and with the latee struck a thief, who died from the effects of the blows, it was held (having regard to the nature of the injuries inflicted and to the subsequent conduct of the accused) that the case did not fall within the 4th exception to s. 99, and that the prisoner was not guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but was protected by ss. 97 and 104 of the Penal Code, and had not exceeded the legal right of private defence of property. certain gipsies for the stolen property, but discovered nothing. After he had completed the search, the gipsies gave him a certain sum of money, which he accepted, but, at the same time, not deeming it sufficient, he demanded a further sum from them. They refused to give anything more on the ground that they were poor and had no more to give. Thereupon he unlawfully ordered one of them to be bound and taken away. On his subordinates proceeding to execute such order, all the gipsies in the camp, men, women, and children, turned out, some four or five of the men being armed with sticks and stones, and advanced in a threatening manner towards the place where such gipsy was being bound and the head constable was standing. Before any actual violence was used by the crowd of advancing gipsies, the head constable fired with a gun at such crowd, when it was about five paces from him, and killed one of the gipsies, and, having done so, ran away. Any apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be the consequence of the acts of such crowd would have ceased had he released the gipsy he had unlawfully arrested and withdrawn himself and his subordinates, or had he effected his escape. Held, that such head constable had not a right of private defence against the acts of such gipsies, as those acts did not reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be their consequence, and such head constable was guilty of culpable homicide amounting to murder. 38. ——— Penal Code, s. 304A—Penal Code, ss. 336, 337, and 338—Rashness—Negligence. S. 304*A* of the Penal Code does not apply to a case in which there has been the voluntary commission of an offence against the person. If a man intentionally commits such an offence, and consequences beyond his immediate purpose result, it is for the Court to determine how far he can be held to have the knowledge that he was likely by such act to cause the actual result ; and if such knowledge can be imputed, the result is not to be attributed to mere rashness ; if it cannot be imputed, still the wilful offence does not take the character of rashness, because its consequences have been unfortunate. Acts, probably or possibly involving danger to others, but which in themselves are not offences, may be offences under s. 336, 337, 338, or 304*A* if done without due care to guard against the dangerous consequences. Acts which are offences in themselves must be judged with regard to knowledge, or means of knowledge, of the offender and placed in their appropriate place in the class of offences of the same character. The man died from hæmorrhage. The kobiraj was charged, under s. 304*A* of the Penal Code, with causing death by doing a rash and negligent act. It was contended that, inasmuch as the prisoner had performed similar operations on previous occasions, it was not a rash act within the meaning of that section, and that at all events he was entitled to the benefit of s. 8 of the Penal Code, as he did the act in good faith, without any intention to cause death, and for the benefit of the patient, who had accepted the risk. Held, that, as the prisoner was admittedly uneducated in matters of surgery, and having regard to the meaning of "good faith" as defined in s. 52 of the Penal Code, he was not entitled to the benefit of s. 88. Held, further, that s. 88 did not apply to the case, as it was not shown by the accused, on whom the burden of proving that fact lay, that the deceased knew the risk he was running in consenting to the operation, and he could not therefore be said to have accepted the risk. Held, also, that, under the circumstances, the conviction under s. 304*A* was a proper one. On the objections of the paternal and maternal uncles of the boy that under the circumstances of the case the father was not fit and proper person to be appointed the guardian of the minor :—Held although the father is primâ facie entitled to the custody of his infant child, he can be deprived of such parental right if the circumstances justify it ; therefore in a case where a child who was brought up as a Hindu, and who expressed a desire to remain a Hindu, and was living with his Hindu relation, who was maintaining him and was looking after his education properly, it would not be to the welfare of the child that he should be handed over to the father and brought up in the Christian faith, and that the Court below, under the circumstances of the case, was right in dismissing the application. 9. ——— Mother's right to custody—Practice—Custody of child, application for—Notice of application—Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 42. A petition for judicial separation by a wife contained a statement in the body thereof to the effect that the petitioner was desirous of having the custody of a child born of the marriage, but contained no prayer to that effect. The respondent appeared and filed an answer to the petition, in which he expressly noticed that portion of the petition. Pending the hearing of the petition, an application was made by the petitioner for the custody of the child pendente lite, which was opposed by the respondent and refused. After decree made for judicial separation, the respondent not appearing at the hearing, an application was made by the petitioner under the provisions of s. 42 of the Act, for the custody of the child. No notice of such application was given to the respondent : Held, that it was the more correct procedure, having regard to the provisions of s. 42, not to include a prayer for the custody in the original petition, and that, following the decision in Horne v. Horne, 30 L. J. P. and M. 200, and Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 30 L. J. P. and M. 200 note, it was unnecessary under the circumstances to give further notice of the appli-

10. ——— Change of religion—Education and prospects of minor—Conduct of natural guardian—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890)—Habeas Corpus—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 491. S, a girl fifteen years of age, had, for the last eight years, with her mother the petitioner's consent been boarded and educated first at the American Marathi Mission School and then at the Methodist Zenana Mission School, of which latter school the respondent was the superintendent. The petitioner during that time had never contributed anything towards the expenses of her daughter's board and education, and was quite unable to do so, being a servant in receipt of a salary of only 8 annas a month, and with no home of her own. S in the meantime had become a Christian and assumed the name of Sarah Hettie Houghton, and would soon be in a position, if allowed to complete her education as she herself desired to do, to earn her own livelihood by teaching. The petitioner now applied under s. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, X of 1882, for an order on the respondent to show cause why S should not be delivered over to the custody of her mother, the petitioner. Held, that, even assuming that S, not being sixteen years of age, was too young, according to the authorities, to be able to decide for herself where she would reside, it was the duty of the Court to refuse the present application, the Court not being satisfied that the application was made bonâ fide by the petitioner, and the petitioner being a servant, earning only 8 annas a month as wages, a pauper, and having no home of her own. Held, further, that, according to the doctrine governing Courts of Equity in such cases, the petitioner by her conduct during the last eight years had precluded herself from demanding that her child should now be given up to her, to do which would, under the circumstances, be manifestly most detrimental to the welfare of the child herself. The true principle deducible from the authorities by which the Court should be guided in such cases is that the Court is to judge upon the circumstances of each particular case, and that the welfare of the infant, irrespective of its age, is the main feature to be regarded. Semble: A boy of fourteen and a girl of sixteen have a right to choose their own residence. 11. ——— Guardian—Act IX of 1861—Marriage of Mahomedan mother with Christian in Mahomedan form. A child, the offspring of a Christian marriage, was living after her father's death under the protection of her mother. A married man, a Christian, came to live with her mother, and, in order to legalize their intercourse, he and the mother became Mahomedans, and were married in Mahomedan form. About three years after, when the child had attained the age of fourteen, some of her relatives applied for an order, under Act IX of 1861, that the girl be removed from the guardianship of the mother and her second husband and placed under a Christian guardian. The girl deposed that she wished to remain with her mother and to become a Mahomedan. Held, by the High Court in granting the application and appointing a guardian in place of her mother that a Judge, in the exercise of his jurisdiction under the Act, is justified in having respect to the religion professed by the father of a minor and in passing such orders with regard to the custody of the person of such minor as he may hold to be in accordance with what would have been the minor's father's wishes had he been alive to express them. Where a mother under colour of a change of religion forms a connection or leads a life which, by persons professing her husband's faith, would be deemed immoral, she thereby ceases to be a proper person to be entrusted with the education of the children of her deceased husband. If the Court finds a case made out for its interference, it will not be deterred from the exercise of its powers because the persons setting it in motion may be actuated by motives other than the interests of the minor. Special leave having been given to appeal to the Privy Council, the order was upheld. SKINNER v. ORDE

23. ——— Bhagdari tenures in Broach—Inheritance—Special custom—Priority of nearest male relative to daughter or sister. The plaintiff, as heir of her father (a deceased Hindu bhagdar), sued the sons of sisters of her father's paternal uncle for possession of certain bhagdari lands situate in a village in the Broach collectorate. The defendants pleaded that they were entitled to the property under a special custom regulating the succession to bhagdari lands in the collectorate of Broach, under which custom, on the death of a bhagdar, whether Hindu or Mahomedan, without male issue, his nearest male relations (after the death of his widow), whether sprung through male or female relatives of the deceased bhagdar, succeed to his bhagdari lands to the exclusion of his daughter or sister. Held, that the custom alleged was sufficiently proved, and that the defendants were entitled to retain possession of the bhagdar lands in question. Per Curiam.—The custom alleged being if not universal at least general in the Broach collectorate, it should, in the case of any particular village, at any rate on evidence being given of its continuance in other similar adjacent villages, if not in the particular village itself (though it would always be more satisfactory if this could be done), be held still to survive, unless and until the opposite party proved the adoption of some other custom, or of the ordinary rules of inheritance, in the particular village, or, failing such proof, the general prevalence of such rules or such opposing custom in other similar adjacent villages. Quære: Whether males sprung of male relatives of a deceased bhagdar have priority over males sprung of female relatives of the same. Quære: Whether a daughter or sister of a deceased bhagdar is wholly excluded, by the custom, from the line of inheritance, or would, on failure of male relations, succeed to the bhagdari lands. Court of first instance, found that this custom had not been proved to prevail in the family. On an appeal contesting this finding, it was argued, among other objections, that the High Court had not given sufficient effect to an entry in the wajib-ul-urz of a zamindari village, the principal one comprised in the family estate now in dispute; the last owner of that estate who held all the shares in the village having caused an entry to be made to the effect that his eldest son should be his sole heir, the others of the family being maintained. Held, that, though termed an entry in a wajib-ul-urz, the document was not entitled to the name, but was rather in the nature of a testamentary attempt to make a disposition contrary to the Mahomedan law of descent. 28. ——— Suit by landholder for declaration of right to take land from occupancy-tenant for cultivation of indigo—Wajib-ul-urz, construction of. The zamindars of a village sued an occupancy-tenant for a declaration of their right to maintain a custom which was thus recorded in the wajib-ul-urz :—"When necessary, one or two bighas out of the tenants' lands are taken with their consent (ba khushi) for sowing indigo." Upon the basis of this entry, they claimed to be entitled to take a portion of the occupancy-holding at a certain period of the year, for the purpose of cultivating indigo. Held, by the Full Bench, that the word "khushi" used in the wajib-ul-urz indicated that the land was only to be taken with the occupancy-tenant's consent, and the document created no right of the nature alleged, namely, to take the land despite the tenant. 31. ——— *Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-urz. 34. ——— Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-urz—Evidence of contract and custom—Act XIX of 1873, s. 91—Beng. Reg. VII of 1822, s. 9, cl. (i). The wajib-ul-urz of a village is a document of a public character, prepared with all publicity, and must be considered as primâ facie evidence of the existence of any custom which it records. Its record of the existence of a custom of pre-emption is sufficiently strong evidence to cast on those denying the custom the burden of proof; and in the same manner, when it records a contract of pre-emption between the shareholders, there is a presumption that it is binding on the shareholders. Looking to the public character of the document, and the way it is prepared, and that all shareholders, whether signing it or not, must be presumed to have assented to its terms, the inferences to be deduced from it cannot be disregarded except when they are rebutted by evidence of an opposite character. A suit to enforce the right of pre-emption, which was based on contract and custom as evidenced by the wajib-ul-urz of a village, was dismissed by the lower Courts on the ground that any contract which might be founded on the wajib-ul-urz was not binding on the vendor-defendant, as that document did not bear his signature, and the lower Appellate Court attached no weight to the wajib-ul-urz as proof of the custom of pre-emption, because it was drawn up when Regulation VII of 1822 was in force, and at that time there was no legal presumption of its accuracy. The claim was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff's evidence did not prove the existence of a custom of pre-emption in the village. Held, that the lower Appellate Court had erred in dealing with the evidence, and that, although this particular wajib-ul-urz was made before Act XIX of 1873 came into force, yet the weight which would attach to its entries, both as proof of the contract as well of customs was very

35. ——— Cess—Record of cess by settlement officer. The fact that a cess leviable in accordance with village custom has been recorded by a settlement officer is important evidence of the custom, but not conclusive proof of it. Held, on the evidence in this case, that the village customs set up was not established. LALA v. HIRA SINGH I. L. R. 2 All. 49

36. ——— Manorial Dues and Cesses. The plaintiffs, zamindars, sued for a declaration of their ancient rights, as against all the tenants of a certain village, to appropriate all trees of spontaneous growth and the fruits of other trees planted by the tenants; also to receive as manorial tribute a certain number of ploughs annually and a certain offering of poppy-seed and other farm-produce on the occasion of the marriage of persons of the lower caste of tenants, with a further right to levy a certain proportion of the produce of the sugar-cane manufactories and fields in the village. The lower Courts having decreed the suit on vague and general parol evidence as to the existence of the said customs:—Held, (a) that, where a custom regarding several cesses is alleged, the existence of the custom regarding each cess should be tried as a separate issue; (b) that parol evidence as to the existence of such customs should be tested by ascertaining the grounds of the witness's opinion; (c) that the best proof of custom is instances in which it has been acted on and documentary evidence that it has been enforced; (d) that a custom, to be good, must be definite. 38. ——— Dhardhura, applicability of custom of—Accretion. The custom of dhardhura applies to lands thrown up or formed by fluvial action either in one year or in the course of a number of years. Whether it is equally applicable to chuckee formations or tracts of lands severed by a sudden change in the course of a river, and yet preserving their identity of site and surface after the severance, must be determined by proof of the extent of the custom. 39. ——— Dhardhura. The custom of dhardhura is, when applied to lands gained otherwise than by gradual accretion, opposed to equity; and such a custom must be proved, not by the vague assertions of witnesses, but by a sufficient enumeration of instances. 40. ——— Dhardhura—Beng. Reg. XI of 1825, ss. 2, 4 (ii). The question whether the custom of dhardhura applies to lands gained by gradual accretion only, or also to lands which have been separated from a mouzah by a sudden change of stream, must be determined in each case on the evidence; for although the Court would be disposed to scrutinize with care evidence in regard to a custom which would have the effect of passing from one owner to another lands long held and enjoyed, and of which the character is in no way altered by river action, yet it cannot be said that such a custom can in no case be established and given effect to. Katiyanee v. Mahomed Shurfoodeen, 3 Agra 189, Isree Singh v. *Shurfoodeen, 1 N. 41. ——— Customary right—Privacy—Right of building and to interfere with erection of building. A customary right of privacy under certain conditions exists in India and in the North-Western Provinces, and is not unreasonable, but merely an application of the maxims sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas and aedificare in tuo propro solo non licet quod alteri noceat. In the case of a building for parda purposes, newly erected without the acquiescence of the owner of an adjacent building site, a custom preventing such owner from so building, as to interfere with the privacy of the first new building, would be unreasonable and consequently bad in law. But if such adjacent owner, without protest or notice, allowed his neighbour to erect and consequently to incur expenses in connection with a building for the use of pardanashin women, a custom preventing him from interfering with the privacy of such new building would not in India be unreasonable. 42. ——— Customary right—Facts necessary to establish the existence of a customary right—Easement—Easement Act, ss. 4 and 18. The plaintiff sued for possession of a piece of land which, he alleged, formed part of the courtyard of his kothi and for demolition of a chabutra thereon. The defendants denied the plaintiff's title, and alleged that they always used the chabutra as a sitting place, and that during the Moharram the tazias and alums were exhibited upon the chabutra, and a takht was placed upon it. The Court of first instance found that the defendants had a right to use the land in the manner claimed during the Moharram. The lower Appellate Court, on the question of the defendant's right to use the said land in the manner claimed by them, found as follows:—"That various mirasis, whose connection with each other is not established, have within a period of twenty years or so placed tazias upon land and sung there." Held, that this finding of fact did not necessarily in law lead to the conclusion that there was a local custom by virtue of which the easement now claimed by the defendants was acquired. Where a local custom excluding or limiting the general rule of law is set up, a Court should not decide that it exists unless such Court
